

foundation of the church. In this neighbourhood is situated MOUNT HERMON CEMETERY; it lies on the south side of the St. Lewis Road, and slopes irregularly, but beautifully, down the cliff overhanging the St. Lawrence. It was laid out by Major Douglas, the engineer who designed Greenwood Cemetery, New York. A drive, upwards of two miles in extent, affords access to all parts of the grounds. Many beautiful monuments adorn them, and in the front stands the handsome temple called St. Michael's Chapel, which is weekly attended by the Sovereign's representative and suite, and rank and fashion of the city. Leaving this spot, the ride continues through the woods on the edge of the banks rising from the shore. On the south side are distinguished the embouchures of the Etchemin and Chaudière pouring in their tribute of waters. The view from Pointe à Ruisseau is worthy the attention of any artist. A little further on are the ruins of what was once a large stone chapel. A visit to the Church of Ste. Foy, from which is seen, below, the St. Charles, gliding smoothly through its valley, with the villages of Lorette and Charlesbourg in the distance, must not be omitted.

The other Cemeteries worthy of a visit are Belmont, on the Ste. Foy Road, and St. Charles on Little River Road, each about three miles from the city.

The Indian village of Lorette is nine miles, Lake St. Charles twelve miles, and Lake Beauport eighteen miles from Quebec. Each repays the visitor in beauty. But by all means make a downward voyage from Lake St. Charles to the Lorette Falls in a birch canoe, for the sake of getting even but a glimpse of CASTORVILLE, a forest-wild, through which the St. Charles, mantled over by a dense growth of spruce and fir trees, intersected by a maze of avenues, glides, having passed through a distance of eight miles of perfectly fairy navigation. The mansion lies on a point formed by the Grand Désert and St. Charles streams: along the banks
