JUSTICE IN THE FAR WEST

By JACK BERG.

How Revenge Came Swiftly in the Case of the Slayer of Blission.

The colony at Shawnee Creek had grown almost alarmingly during the last year. Ever since Fred Blission had found several nuggets of gold near the big tree in the canon miners had come in by the score from all parts of the surrounding country, so that the camp now resembled a big city.

Fred's friends had advised him to send his riches to the bank in "Frisco," but he had not been able to part with the dear yellow metal for which he had worked so hard for many weary months before he found anything.

He carried it in a strong, yellow belt strapped around his waist. One morning he was found in his cabin dead, a bullet hole through the temple and the gold gone.

Dick Fiddleson, who went to his cabin at 6 o'clock in the morning, was the one to discover the body, and when he had seen that his friend was stiff and cold he called Billy Jones, who was just passing by, wife in hand, to start on a hunting trip in the morning.

Billy Jones changed his mind on the way from the right to the left cheek, winked his black eyes, a thing he never did, except when he was much excited, and said: "Just as I told him, I warned him that those loafers—and he made a movement to indicate the part of the camp where the newcomers lived—that those loafers would murder him."

He washed the blood away from the man's face, lifted him up and laid him down on his bed and covered him with the same blankets under which he had slept so many nights in the canon when he was still poor and starving.

It was now in the month of May. The southern slopes of the mountains were covered with bluebells and green grass and the rays of the sun told of the coming spring. But the two men who walked away underneath the dark branches of the pines were not thinking of spring—they only thought of their dead friend and the way to avenge him.

"I think we had better go over there first," Dick Fiddleson suggested, well knowing that Billy Jones would understand that he meant the Victoria saloon had the gold.

Billy nodded his head, and a few moments later the two friends were standing in front of the saloon building of Jack Holliday, whose whiskey was famed throughout the whole country. They found his honor in the act of kicking a new-comer of evil reputation named Sam as great—what the real name was, of course, no one knew—out of the saloon into the fresh air.

As soon as Dick and Billy had given three cheers to show their appreciation of this act and being told that the customer who had just left the saloon had been intoxicated before he came and tried to pick a quarrel with everybody else they asked Jack to go along and follow them into the saloon where Morgan J. Mooney, Tom Sawyer and Algernon Knownothing were playing pool.

The two friends who had discovered the murder were given their whiskey and as soon as they had swallowed it Billy Jones laid loud enough for any one in the room to hear it, "Fred Blission is dead."

The three pool players dropped their cues and looked at a while Tom Sawyer, the little fat Tom, who was known as a mighty fighter, asked, "How did he die?" "Yes, how did he die?" asked the owner of the saloon, who came from behind the bar.

"He was murdered," said Dick, blowing enormous clouds of black smoke from his short pipe. "We found him dead in his cabin." "And the gold?" asked Morgan J. Mooney.

Billy Jones whistled, told his tale and made a movement with his brown right hand as if he would imitate a bird flying away.

The other nodded and Jack Holliday only gave expression to the thought that was in everybody's mind when he said: "One of the newcomers has shot him."

After a rather long pause, during which the saloon keeper had filled the glasses, Billy Jones stood up and said: "Boys, I think we all agree that the man who has done that no longer has any right to stay among us."

Everybody assented, and Billy went on: "If you have no objections, I will take the matter in hand. The murdered man was my friend, and I have the best right to punish the murderer."

Taddaeus. We will pay him a visit, but first get your horses, as we shall probably need them.

A little while later the boys were back with their horses, and after a short gallop, the body of nine men stood outside "the banking office" of Mark Taddaeus.

The door of the cabin was closed, but opened a crack from Dick Fiddleson. Inside Mark was ready to receive them, a revolver in each hand, but he did not dare to shoot any of the determined-looking boys.

Billy Jones was the first to speak. "Somebody has today turned over to you something which did not belong to him. Please turn that over to us."

The banker denied and swore that he had not received anything from anybody that morning, but without paying any attention to him he searched the whole cabin until he found buried under the floor in one corner a heavy iron-bound case.

"They key," shouted Dick Fiddleson to the banker, who was now trembling with fear, but who nevertheless refused to give up the key.

The case was opened, and in it was found the belt of the murdered man. Billy Jones took the belt, turned to the banker, slapped his face and shouted: "Who killed him?"

"The banker did not answer. "Who has given you this belt?" asked Billy, again, and hit the man in the face with a heavy buckle.

Seeing that he was forced to tell the truth, the banker at last gave in and admitted that James Great had turned it over to him in the morning.

"So it is that scamp that I am just after throwing out of my saloon," cried Jack Holliday. "I thought from the start that one of the newcomers had done it."

Mark Taddaeus shut his eyes with an expression of contempt and Billy Jones had to kick him several times before he could make him open them again.

"We know well enough that it will not take long for a miserable wretch like you to untie the rope, but this I tell you straight: If you are seen here in Mark's woodlawn 24 hours from now your life will be of no more worth than that of a rat."

A shot from Billy's revolver smashed the bottle as an accompaniment to his words.

As the boys were riding away from the bank Tom Sawyer asked: "Why, Billy, how did you know that that scoundrel had the gold?"

"Yes, and I am sure it was himself who murdered Fred to get it," added Dick Fiddleson.

Billy shook his head and said: "No, that coward never had the courage to murder. The man who shot Fred, I am sure, did not have five cents in his pocket. Because nobody had left the camp I was sure that the murderer must have made his booty into ready money and was sure that there was no other place where he could do it, but at the bank."

Just at this moment Mooney came with a mighty shout and pointed toward the west, with his finger. "There he rides now."

All eyes followed the direction of his finger and saw some distance away a man on horseback who was evidently in a great hurry to get away.

"So the scoundrel has been told any more," growled Billy Jones, putting the spurs to his horse.

UTILITY COAT FOR TRAVELING AND RAINY DAYS. The business woman's wardrobe is not complete without some sort of a long enveloping wrap which answers for traveling and rainy wear. This garment must of necessity be practical in material as well as style. Very practical and exceptionally smart are the new rubberized taffeta coats in checks and plaids. Golden brown with plaids of white, red, blue, green and darker tones of brown are perhaps the favorites in these garments. Here a long loose coat with full length sleeves and narrow turn-over collar of brown velvet, is made of brown taffeta overlaid with white and navy blue. The back of this coat is cut with a bias center seam which gives the garment a snug fit over the shoulders and makes it flare gracefully from the empire waistline to the hem. The fronts are double breasted and cut with that French shirred seam which extends to the hem, and on this seam are the pockets, set on the inside of the coat. The outside flaps are trimmed with buttons covered with plaid silk. The coat is lined with brilliant red taffeta. Such a garment is extremely light in weight but gives ample protection against a chance summer shower. It is also admirable for automobile wear.

HE OBJECTS TO RED TAPE

Engineer Hunter Complains of Delay in Procuring Supplies.

At the regular meeting of the water and sewerage board yesterday afternoon a report by H. G. Hunter, complaining that the delay in procuring supplies was due to "red tape" caused a breezy discussion between the director and resident engineer. The board decided to take over. With regard to the order which was required. Tenders for special castings, department supplies and coal were awarded. On Oct. 20 last, was 47,000 gallons a day, and that by a test on June 20 it had been reduced to less than 20,000. No. 2 section, which has been leaking at the rate of 1,700,000 gallons a day, had been recently repaired and the waste was now about 50,000 gallons a day. No. 3 section had stood the full pressure since Sept. 27 and was quite satisfactory. The Robertson dam had stood two winters and was in a first class condition.

In reply to Ald. Baxter, Mr. Hunter said sections 1, 3 and 4 were in a condition to be taken over. With regard to section 2 Mr. Barbour had said he would accept it with a leak of 100,000 gallons a day.

The chairman said Mr. Murdoch being the channel through which supplies were ordered, the report appeared that certain work had been partly completed, complained that the procuring of material was hampered by the amount of red tape that he had to go through and the work hindered in consequence. He did not know if the pipes or material would be here this year or next.

MR. EMERSON DISINTERESTED

He Says According to Court's Decision He Has No Chance to Win His Libel Suit.

Toronto, June 26—Hon. H. R. Emerson was in Toronto today on his way to Virginia. Asked about his libel suit he said: "I am not troubling about it at all. When the court ruled that any paper could publish what it liked about public men so long as it believed what it published, I decided not to bother. I have no further interest in what they are doing at Fredericton."

"It is just like hitting your head against a stone wall. I am satisfied so far as the preliminary examination is concerned for they certainly failed to prove the riding charge that I was ejected from a hotel with two women of ill-repute."

"I am willing to let the people decide for themselves, whether I was guilty or not."

Mr. Emerson had not read the latest news from Fredericton this morning. "What do the papers say?" he laughed. "You know I haven't been reading much about it lately. I am too busy and haven't any interest in it now."

"If it is as the court ruled, I might as well have been in Newfoundland as in Montreal on that night. I couldn't have got a verdict of libel, so long as they say they believed me guilty. I can't prove that they did not think they were telling the truth, so why bother any more about it?"
