

How many girls in St. John have lost the chance of marriage?

In England alone—where a million men who went to fight will never come back—there are 600,000 girls who have lost the chance of marriage. What will they do—go on working? And think of the widows—400,000 of them!

At the end of 1918 there were 1,550,000 women in England replacing men—running everything from printing presses to elevators—cheap workers as well as good. Will they give up their jobs? Will their employers want to let them go?

As our soldiers come home we, here, shall have to face the very problems which W. L. George describes in "Women and Labor" in February GOOD HOUSEKEEPING. As an authority on women's relation to society Mr. George answers clearly the questions that all of us are asking.

His article is only one of the important features for February—as important as James Oliver Curwood's tale of the Northwest

Mounted Police, "The River's End," and Clara Savage's description of how Paris acted when it heard about the armistice; as Harold Kellock's "Who is a Bolshevik and Why?" and I. A. R. Wylie's latest masterpiece of fiction, "With its pages of charming interesting Spring Fashions and the Good Housekeeping Institute's sound helpful facts, this number truly has a whole month of diversion and satisfaction—ready for you now—tonight!

LOIS WEBER

A GAIN MISS WEBER STRIKES A DEEP HUMAN NOTE. In "The Price of a Good Time" she depicted most vividly the existence of a working girl tempted with the luxuries afforded through her love affair with her employer's son. In this later drama the author delineates a chain of incidents in the humble life of another working girl in which the ever-ready scandal spreader and mud-slinger seeks to smear the character of a pure girl eventually crowned in honorable orange blossoms.
