Germany, he declared, would never be a naval power. The bill, he said, was the outcome of personal rule. Count Limburg-Stirrum, the servative leader, disputed Herr Schoen-prominent South African magnate this afternoon, Lasked him what were the prospects of the mining market generally. Being of French nationality he merely shrugged his shoulders and made a mone. On pressing for a definite expression of opinion he said that "the Continental operators were sick of Kaffirs and sick of Australians, and that the English public, even if they choose, could not move the mining market by themselves on its enlarged basis. And they don't choose," he concluded. "Would the Kaffir market support a British Columbia boom?" I asked, as a gentle feeler. "A B.C. boom? Don't pelieve there'll be one!" I ventured the reminder that already had a boomlet.

"My dear sir," retorted the jobber, British Columbia may be a very fine country. I won't say it isn't. But this I will say, that the handful of jobbers, who compose it at present will have to cool their heels a year or so before there is much prospect of their being harassed with buying on any great scale. Vulgarly speaking," he said, as he bustled away to his office to report to his clerks a scanty afternoon's work, "the public are 'off their feed' in mines at all events, | Christmas. and although British Columbia may have a dozen Le Rois they won't get their appetite back without their courage. And that's had a bad shaking.'

Is a Pessimistic View. This is of course a pessimistic view of the situation, vouchsafed by a jobber who doesn't at present believe much in the prospects of either British Columbia or the Klondike, but it is the opinion of a sound business man, who knows the mining market thoroughly, mixes freely with the very best mining men, and does a large business with Paris,

By the way, the latest news from the Golden Cache has caused some consternation here, and I hope that it will be presently proved that the trial crushing was merely a parcel of quite unrepresentative ore. Golden Cache on the top of Galena would be bad news indeed in the gossiping mouths of those who already resent the intrusion of British Columbia in domains sacred to the dusky Kaffir and the frisky Westralian.
