

Reception Held In St. Andrew's

Miss Eleanor Galbraith Was Guest of Honor Thursday
—Leaves in August as Missionary Nurse for Honan,
China.

A reception was held by the ladies of St. Andrew's church from four to six Thursday afternoon in honor of Miss Eleanor Galbraith, who leaves in August as a missionary nurse for Honan, China.

Miss Galbraith is a St. John girl who received her training in Boston, graduating as a nurse. She is a member of the St. Andrew's congregation, and is being sent by the Presbyterian Board of Toronto.

Her many friends were glad to spend a social hour with her and have this opportunity of wishing her success in her chosen career. During the afternoon Mrs. John H. Thomson presented Miss Galbraith with a purse containing over one hundred dollars, accompanied by a large bouquet of carnations. Mrs. Thomson congratulated Miss Galbraith on her choice of a life work, speaking of the new duties, dangers, and self-sacrifice which it entailed. "It is a special privilege for one so young," Mrs. Thomson said.

"To go so far in the Master's service," Miss Galbraith, in reply, thanked the ladies for their gifts and good wishes. She spoke of the pleasure it had always been to work in St. Andrew's Sunday School, and said she was delighted to go as a missionary from St. Andrew's Church.

Miss L. Mowatt, of Kingston, Ont., a delegate to the National Council of Women, was present and gave a splendid talk on missionary work, telling of the number of missionaries from China whom she had met and of their successful work, the encouragement received, and the enlargement of hospital work.

Mrs. James MacTavish gave an interesting talk on missionary work amongst the East Indians in Trinidad and British Guiana. She recently visited all the mission fields of the Presbyterian Church in that part of the world.

She described what she saw in the schools, speaking particularly of the first-hour's Bible study, and the keen memory which the children had. They are able to recite long portions of scripture without prompting. Mrs. MacTavish had helped to distribute articles from a bale of goods sent from St. John to the Rev. Harvey Morton at Tunapuna, Trinidad, and told of the great pleasure afforded the children in the orphanage of its contents.

Mrs. John Magee was convener of the Refreshment Committee, assisted by Mesdames Murphy, White, Simon, Murray, Miss Rennie and Miss Homer. Among those present was Mrs. James Gilbert, of Carleton Place, who brought greetings from Mr. and Mrs. Morton.

Miss Galbraith is to be designated July 28th in St. Andrew's Church for her new work. A joint meeting of all the Presbyterian Churches in the city will be called for this service.

VI.—The Brande

From the Savage Tribes of Borneo Comes a Strange Poison, and Though It is a Far Cry From Malaysia to London There the Poison Did its Deadly Work.

When my friend, Hogg Tredways, that distinguished specialist in ways that are dark, turned down the case of Oswald Street, his opinion, that it was hollow of interest, that it was not a case at all, in fact, and that one does not angle for big fish in clear shallow waters, was sincere and final.

That was why he sent away Margaret Wildrave, who had come, at my suggestion, on behalf of Street, who had loved her before the clang of a fanged prison door shut him out from her life.

It was merely the call of impulse, therefore, which, a fortnight later, as Tredways and I were passing, Miss Wildrave's house, which is within five minutes' walk of the Marble Arch, spurred him to say, "Suppose we see if the lady is in?"

Two minutes later we were with her. "This is very kind of you," she said wistfully, "but you have come too late."

I experienced a shock of horror. Street had ended his life?

The great convict, prison called Chains had opened to him for egress its gates three weeks ago. I was Chaplain there: the Reverend Horace Francis. Men sometimes pass through the Gehenna of prison erroneously condemned. When I suspected as much, I brought such cases to Hogg Tredways, who took them up on the expiration of sentence. For some years I had watched Street. I could not think his conduct that of a man who had committed a terrible crime. His sentence had been reduced because of his self-sacrificing bravery in a fire which had raged through one of the prison galleries. I wished to take him to my ways, but he refused. He went straight off and buried himself in his fumes day. Persistent, I sought Miss Margaret Wildrave, who went to my friend with Street's story. As I said, it was held without a flicker of suggestion that Street had not killed Auguste Brandewine.

Indeed, he admitted it.

More, Brandewine himself lived long enough to send a message, a dying message, blurred, feeble, but legible; "Oswald Street the man who murdered me."

And now we were in the house of the late Auguste Brandewine who had been a traveller and keen naturalist, in his hour.

Miss Wildrave, his niece, whom he had brought up from babyhood, had been left his property.

"Too late," Tredways echoed sharply. "What has happened?"

The lady flushed. She was obviously embarrassed. "Time is so precious; we have lost another fortnight," she stammered.

Tredways took the chair offered to him.

"Come," he demurred, pleasantly, "that is not so serious when we remember that Street was eight years in Chains. I propose, very tersely, to recapitulate the facts—" he stopped. A picture on the wall had gripped his attention.

"That is almost horrible," said he. "I am of your opinion," answered Miss Wildrave, turning round. "Professor Brandewine brought it home with him from one of his journeys into the Malay Peninsula. It is a native painting done on some fibrous material. I do not know what those characters underneath mean."

"Is it the face of a corpse?" I asked.

"At any rate it is a ghastly face, not without merit," remarked Tredways. He jerked his chair round and faced our hostess. "I understand, Miss Wildrave, that a mutual attachment was between you and Oswald Street, and that it was not regarded favorably by Professor Brandewine, chiefly on account of Street's comparative poverty. The latter, however, persisted until he was ordered to keep away altogether. This was the motive for the crime put forward by the prosecution. It lacks originality, certainly, but is not without strength, the power of a hopeless passion on an uncontrolled will."

"On the night of the crime your lover had determined to see you again. He climbed to a balcony, helped in the feat by his sailor's life, he being then first mate on a cargo boat. His idea was to traverse this balcony until he reached your room. Unluckily, as he climbed over the iron parapet he was stopped by Brandewine himself, who was in his room, the blinds being up, and the glass door open. Street stated that the professor was sitting in an armchair, that he beckoned to him to enter, that he asked him to fetch him a certain phial from a shelf at a cupboard in the room and to pour him out a few drops immediately. He complained of faintness, he said. Street obeyed. No sooner had Brandewine swallowed the liquid than he sank back—a dead man. Horrified, Street turned a hasty attention to the contents of the phial. Too late, he recognized in it a powerful poison. Either he had fetched the wrong bottle, or the professor had asked for the wrong one. At any rate, he had inadvertently killed Brandewine."

"At that moment he heard a knocking at the door. Every instinct warned him that to be caught there, in the circumstances, would be fatal to him. He fled by the way he had come."

"He was arrested on the following day, trying to get back to his ship. The imprints of his fingers, soiled by his climb, were plain on the label of the phial. Then he admitted his stealthy ingress to the house. His story was proved to be false, because the professor had not at once expired. He had had time and strength sufficient to write one line condemning Oswald Street in the most effectual manner. Beyond doubt he had been
