WHERE HEROES ARE BURIED

LAST HONORS FOR EVERY MAN FROM CANADA.

How the Remains of the Fallen are Being Cared for and Plans for Future Memorials.

A blessed and a glorious thing it is to die for one's country. So quoth the ancient Romans. Every true Canadian heart echoes this noble sentiment, dian heart echoes this none seminary, thinking on that gallant army of Canada's sons who have laid down their lives in the greatest of causes. Never forgotten will be the graves of these heroes. Even now, in the chaos of war, the Canadian military authori-war, the Canadian minday are the very beginning—carefully registering every grave, locating it for future honor.

Not even those brave men killed in furious action in the front line, buried, perforce, by dead of night, manhan in the very narapets them. mayhap in the very parapets themselves, or roughly sepulchred in No Man's Land, not even those whose graves are deep dugouts, are omitted from this careful chronicle, mapped out on almost surveyed lines.

The Wooden Cross.

To-day, right in among the tren-ches, one sees the little, temporary brown-stained wooden crosses sup-plied by the Government. Each bears the name, rank and battalion and the day of the death of the man who sleeps beneath it. These are the foremost graves. Farther back, but still quite close to the lines, up in the desolate Ypres saiient and at other places, I have seen the little graveyards with their rows of white graveyards with their rows of white

To these cemeteries, wherever humanly possible, the dead are borne m the trenches, wrapped in the soldier's blanket, and laid to rest. Though, be the graves in the trenches and under fire, the padre comes, nevertheless, to read the service over them, while their comrades stand by with bowed heads. Even in those God's Acres which cling so close to the firing line is displayed the little touch of human sympathy. Here, for the most part, regimental crosses

AFTER THE WAR?

Allies Must Compete With German Efficiency in Production

According to statements made to high officials, for two years following the outbreak of the war Germany kept her factories running at full capacity, turning out great quantities of products not required by the war, which were stored away to be dump-ed upon the world's markets after peace is declared.

A remarkable statement, made ir this connection is that one German is worth two Americans as a unit of production. For cheapness of manufac ture, it is said, the Germans will com-pete even with the Chinese. Conse-quently, it is believed the Germans, defeated on land and sea, will turn to manufacture and trade as never be-fore, and thus take revenge on their

The Allies also are warned by tembers of the French mission that ne "virtues" of the Germans must not be overlooked. "Virtues" in this connection mean co-operation, co-or-dination, discipline, tenacity, self-sacrifice. These qualities displayed by the Germans have won the generous admiration of their enemies. But American officials are given warning that their ople must compete active-ly with the Germans along these lines.

"A number of the leading men in the civic business life of the town were marked out and compelled to attend by turns at the town hall to be shot on the spot at the least sign of revolt among the townspeople," continued Mr. Whitaker.

"Not a few of the mill owners were ordered to weave cloth for the invaders, and on their refusal were sent to Germany and held to ransom. Many of the mill operatives, quite young girls, were directed to sew sandbags for the German trenches. They, too, for the German trenenes. They, too, refused, but the Germans had their own ways of dealing with what they regarded as juvenile obstinacy. They dragged the girls to a disused moving picture hall, and kept them there without food and water until their will was broken.
