Canadian Candy is wholesome It produces real energy

ALL through the war the highest medical and food authorities were insistent in their recommendations to give the soldiers candy.

In Military Hospitals and Convalescent Homes candy was allowed to seriously wounded patients whose condition called for constant nourishment in a light, nutritious, easily-digested form.

As the war progressed, the demand for candy grew to enormous proportions. Soldiers and sailors alike found by experience that candy produced real energy, while stimulants gave only deceptive temporary strength.

This war experience is supported by scientific opinion, and some misconceptions are set right in the following extract from the Canada Lancet:

"Candy and Chocolate are nutritious, stimulating foods. There is not the least scientific foundation for the opinion that eating candy is injurious to the teeth. The lack of sugar is much more likely to injure the teeth through impaired nutrition than even its excessive use is liable to do by any digestive troubles which might result from overuse."

"In like manner there is little foundation for the common opinion that the consumption of candy causes digestive troubles."

Candy brings sunshine into the lives of children. Children are fond of candy because their bodies require fuel which candy best produces. Not only eat it yourself, but encourage your children to eat candy in rational quantities. It is good for them.

Candy is a Splendid Food.

dinner table at Greycourt! Not only a decent one, indeed, but one exquisitely appointed in every way, lacking nothing in which taste and refinement have a voice. Where are the honest chops, between the skimpy dish of potatoes? Gone, thank Heaven! relegated to a limbo from whence the devoutly trusts they may never return! The little skirmish between her sister and her cousin is entirely lost to her; she has eyes for the lovely only for this wonderful transformation scene. Peters, in an extremely presentable suit—it has seen service, but is still holding bravely together, and is likely to for some years yet to come, a cask for its being worn coming few and far between—is handing cutlery and pouring out champagne as though it is his one sole purpose in life to deliver from starvation his master's guests. It occurs to Griselda that in this suit—old, though now to her—he is any amount more reasonable-looking than in his everyday apparel, and that even the superfluous wart on the top of his nose seems to have toned down miraculously beneath its influence. She is of course not aware that down-stairs this suit is called "Mr. Seaton's own," and that it is doomed only for his benefit. But who is the cook? Reason points to Mrs. Gruneh.

A thought of the hypocrisy of it all, of the pretence of one day, the reality of the next, of the honor done to him, the son, whilst she and Vera are treated with such abominable neglect, brings the colour to her cheeks, the fire to her eyes. It is so, now to her yet to be dependent, that she forgets, a Vera never does, to see that she has no claim to be considered in any way. And yet, if Vera remembers, does the knowledge gained serve her even in little? Instinctively she glances at her elder sister, and something in the expression of the proud lips tells her that to Vera too this display, this killing of the fatted calf for Seaton, has hurt and humbled her.

Dysart, who is eating his dinner with decided zest and perfect unconcern suggests himself to Griselda as the very incarnation of selfishness. Of course he knows; but it is nothing to him. She looks round at her and loses herself a little in the tough of fairyland the room presents. It is as if it were an echo from the past, a glimpse into the old life when her father still lived, that she hardly knew was dear to her until she had lost it. The glitter of the silver, the glass, the intense perfume of the glowing flowers, the rich tint of the fruits, all seem part of a dream; a sweet one too. Oh, to escape from this hateful life here, and life always amongst—

"As I was saying to your sister, I am afraid you will find life here rather dull," says Dysart, his voice breaking through the cloud of thought that is enooping her.

"I am never dull," returns Griselda, slowly.

"You may rank yourself amongst the clever ones of the earth if you escape boredom down here," says he. "Your mind must to you, indeed, 'a kingdom be,' if you can make out even one yawnless day."

"As for that, I've often yawned when I wasn't dull," says Griselda. "To me yawning is a joy. It's like sneezing to some people. I'm always sure that I'm thoroughly warm and comfortable when I do it."

Mr. Dysart, as though he sees something in this, stares at her profoundly for a moment or two. In reality, he is wondering why both girls should have taken so instantaneous a dislike to him. As a rule women were civil enough, yet here were two to whom he was an utter stranger, and aggressive was the only word he could apply to their looks and words, though both were studiously polite.

"Like a cat," says he presently in a thoughtful tone.

"Oh, I'm not a cat," says Griselda, with some open resentment this time. Then, as though irresistibly amused at the absurd idea that he could possibly have meant it, she bursts into sudden inextinguishable laughter. When Griselda laughs it is impossible not to join in, so bright, so young, so gay, is the sound, and presently Dysart, forgetting that feeling of irritation that has been so strong in him for the past hour, gives way to mirth also. Glancing at Vera, he sees, however, that she seems dead to what has been passing, or at all events has not caught the infection.

cases ended in death! So a recent Canadian investigation showed. These were not cases of infectious diseases—of consumption—of typhoid! They were cases where a person had sustained some slight injury—a cut, a burn, a wireprick—and where the wound, being thought not serious enough for careful treatment, had been neglected. Blood-poisoning and death resulted. When you or your children sustain any injury, ensure against infection by applying Zam-Buk. This balm soothes the pain, stops bleeding, and by destroying all germs prevents blood-poisoning, etc. Hence no time need be lost from work or pleasure by those who use Zam-Buk. Salts in Hot Water Clears Pimply Skin

Says we must make kidneys clean the blood and pimples disappear. Pimples, sores and boils usually result from toxins, poisons and impurities which are generated in the bowels and the n absorbed into the blood through the very ducts which should absorb only nourishment to sustain the body.

It is the function of the kidneys to filter impurities from the blood and cast them out in the form of urine but in many cases the bowels create more toxins and impurities than the kidneys can eliminate then the blood uses the skin pores as the next best means of getting rid of these impurities which often break out all over the skin in the form of pimples.

The surest way to clear the skin of these eruptions, says a noted authority is to get from any pharmacy about four ounces of Jad Salts and take a tablespoonful in a glass of hot water each morning before breakfast for one week. This will prevent the formation of toxins in the bowels. It also stimulates the kidneys to normal activity thus coaxing them to filter the blood of impurities and clearing the skin of pimples.

Jad Salts is inexpensive, harmless and is made from the acid of grapes and lemon juice, combined with lithia. Here you have a pleasant, effervescent drink which usually makes pimples disappear; cleanses the blood and is excellent for the kidneys as well.

Acids in Stomach Cause Indigestion

Create Gas Sourness and Pain How to Treat

Medical authorities state that nearly nine-tenths of the cases of stomach trouble, indigestion, sourness, burning, gas, bloating, nausea, etc., are due to an excess of hydrochloric acid in the stomach and not as you believe to a lack of digestive juices. The delicate stomach lining is irritated, digestion is delayed and food acids causing the disagreeable symptoms which every stomach sufferer knows so well.

Artificial digestants are not needed in such cases and may do real harm. Try having acidless digestive aid and instead get from any druggist a few ounces of Bisulphate of Magnesia and take a teaspoonful in a quarter glass of water right after eating. This sweetens the stomach, prevents the formation of excess acid and there is no sourness, gas or pain. Bisulphate of Magnesia in powder or tablet form—never liquid or milk—is harmless to the stomach, inexpensive to take and is the most efficient form of magnesia for stomach purposes. It is used by thousands of people who suffer from stomach trouble.

tious breath of amusement. Her mouth looks mournful, her whole air unsympathetic.

"I like cats," he says, so languidly that one can see at once that she is merely trying to make conversation—that she really cares a question.

"And I like dogs," says he directly.

"Come here, Jinks." The small terrier, springing up from some place unknown, commences an ecstatic dance upon his hind legs, that presently brings him within his master's grasp, who, catching him by the back of his neck, hauls him up to a seat upon his knees.

"He's very well answered, I assure you," says Dysart, looking at Vera.

"You teach him tricks?" says she, a touch of disdain in her tone. "Don't you think that rather degrades the poor brute? Surely we human beings are and pretend to act the hypocrite enough, with out condemning poor dumb beasts to do the same. Do you know I can't bear to see them dancing and jumping to order. I prefer them as nature meant they should be, happy, affectionate, faithful. I am sorry you teach him tricks; it makes a dog, to my mind, always look so poor."

"Yes," says he, rubbing the dog's nose reflectively as he speaks. "But you see—the fact is—I've never taught him or any other dog a trick in my life."
