My dear Jennies:

I am glad to know that you and Harry like my speech on the Woodsworth resolution. Reprints are being made, with subdivisions and sub-heads, which are a real help in reading and do much to improve the appearance of a speech. As soon as the reprints are received I will send you a copy.

I was much interested in what you told me of the doings of the children, but in particular of Harry Junior's oral. I suppose there is nothing quite so interesting as watching the development of the minds of the little people and seeking to discover from whence the inspiration of their many ideas come. The older I grow the more I can see how much one loses by not being surrounded by a family of growing children; they serve to keep one's own mind active and also informed on new lines of thought and inquiry.

I am sorry that business has not been good this winter. That, however, is the lot of everyone. I have no doubt that in the first line there will be a material improvement in the spring. So far, however, as the depression itself is concerned, I do not expect to see any real improvement for some little time.
