The story of this development reads like time for the Government to take a closer interest in commercial affairs. Politicians, we have been told again and again, have regarded trade as something beneath their notice, and have needed sharp and constant prodding to induce them to pay any attention to the needs of the national commerce. The period of Government isolation from the business world is now, certainly, at an end, and the business world is far from being orpatified by the and freedom of the national legislature.
