TRIED IN WAR DRESS

THE LAST NOTABLE TRIAL IN WHICH INDIANS FIGURED.

Case Where One Chief Was a Coward and Wanted to Live and One Was a Brave and Wanted to Die.

Satanta, Satank and Big Tree were Kiowa chiefs. The trial of the first two for the murder of seven teamsters in Texas in 1871 was the last notable one in which Indians figured. Such a trial at this time would interest the whole country. Occurring at an early day, at a place remote from telegraph facilities and from railway communication, it was little known beyond the town where the chiefs were arraigned in their war paint. They were desperate men, and the safety of the court, lawyers and witnesses required that the chiefs should appear manacled.

Judge Samuel W. T. Lanham, member of congress for 16 terms from the Eighth Texas district, was the prosecuting attorney at the trial held at Jacksboro. General W. T. Sherman was the means of having the chiefs brought to trial. Teamsters employed by government contractors to deliver grain to forts along the frontier had camped for the night ardson and Fort Griffin. They were at tacked by Indians whose weapons were bows and arrows and tomahawks. Seven white men were massacred, horses stolen and grain destroyed. A few teamsters

General Sherman was on the frontier inspecting government posts and came upon the scene a few hours after the fight. He examined the arrows found in the dead, and by reason of his familiarity with the customs of various tribes he said the arrow marks were those of the White men in battle are distinguished by their flag. Indians paint the characters of their tribe on their arrows. General Sherman hastened to Fort Sill and informed the civil authorities, insisting that they should follow up the massacre and bring the perpetrators to trial. A few days later Satanta, Satank and Big Tree went to Fort Sill to draw government supplies. They had a powwow, the result of mean whisky. Satan-ta mounted a dry goods box and boasted that he and Satank and Big Tree had killed seven Tehanas (Texans) and were sorry they had not killed more. A gov-ernment interpreter heard the speech and reported to the civil authorities. Arrest followed, and the three chiefs were started, handcuffed, under strong guard to Jacksboro. On the march Big Tree, whose powerful physique gave him his name, tore away his handcuffs and alone made a ferocious attack upon the guard.

He fought with such desperation that he The march was resumed, and Satanta and Satank were placed in prison and guarded day and night. They were inicted and brought to trial before Judge The two chiefs were Charles Soward. fully advised of their rights by the court through an interpreter. Counsel was ap-pointed for their defense. Thomas Ball and W. Wolfolk appeared for the chiefs. "Except for their manacles," said Judge Lanham, "no white men ever had fairer trials. But it was considered unsafe to bring them into court without handcuffs, for they were the most powerful men I ever saw." The chiefs insisted, on account of their rank, upon appearing in their war paint, and in their war dress were tried. They were and told by the interpreter of the court that they could speak if they so wished. Satanta was the first to avail himself of

"I shall never forget his appearance," said Judge Lanham. "He was nearly seven feet. As he stood up the first question he asked of the captain-the title by which they knew the judge—was if the great father knew that he, Satanta, was to die. He had been to Washington once and had been treated well, and he thought the great father could save him. When he was told there was no hope from that source, he crossed his hands and began pleading.

"'I am a squaw,' he said. 'Satanta no fighting chief. Great medicine man. Do good to sick. Don't want to die. Let squaw go. Satanta will go to his people on Red river, and he make his people be at peace. Whole country to Red river open to palefaces. Palefaces can come with ponies to bank of Red river and water ponies in river and be not afraid. Red river be line of peace bet een my people and palefaces. Don't wan to die,

"That was all he said. I took down his speech and remember it well. Quite a different Indian was old Satank. Powerful, with a head and face almost leonine, he stood up, folded his blanket about him, threw back his head in defiance and spoke: nance and spoke:

"'Satank no squaw. Satank Kiowa chief. Not afraid to die. Captain say Satank die in 60 days.' Then he grunted that grunt which only an Indian can make. It was what we call contempt. Continuing he said, as he held out his manacled hands: 'Take 'em off. Want to die now. Killed Tehanas. Wish um killed more. Glad Tehanas dead. Don't want great father to save Satank. Take 'em off'-pointing to his handcuffs again. 'Want to die here. Want to die now. Not afraid. Satank ready to die now.'
"I never saw such defiance in man or beast as was depicted in his manner. Giving another grunt he sat down on the floor in his war dress and paint. He had plaited in his hair the hair of several white women whom he had scalped. He was the incarnation of a demon. It was a scene for a painter.

"Before the day set for execution the governor of the state commuted the sentence to life imprisonment, but Satank insisted upon dying 'now.' After several years the two were paroled. Sataneral years the two were paroled. Satanta went to his people and not long after tried to incite them to revolt. He was brought back to Huntsville, Tex., and put in the penitentiary. One day he jumped from a window and broke his neck. He was the more dangerous of the two chiefs, for he was the diplomat of his tribe. Satank went to Florida and reversiond sulfan and unrelenting in and remained sullen and unrelenting in his hatred of the whites until his death. "After the trial of Satanta and Satank Indian depredations in Texas ceased."
