

"Look here" she said, showing him the fragments of broken ware. "This is what this piece has been doing while we were away. What is to be done with her?"

"I reckon we'll let her sleep in the stable with Jehurun," said the man, with a malignant smile. "Here, Sisay, you come along with me."

He seized my arm and dragged me along. I screamed out. What had taken Dragon I did not know, but he did not appear, and I was taken to the stable, shoved in at the door, and heard the bell outside driven in.

There were openings high up to let in the air, but with all my activity I could not have reached them. Jehurun seemed to smell me; he instantly began to lash out, to shake his halter, bite with his teeth, and snarl and shriek. My fear was mortal. I groped my way to the corner, and lay there quivering with terror. I felt sure that now I was going to be punished for all my sins. Suddenly something cold touched my hand; I shrieked with agony; the next moment Dragon's tongue licked my cheek. I threw my arms round his neck, and sobbed for joy. He sat up and bore my fondling with good nature.

Now I felt perfectly safe and happy, though Jehurun seemed to be unwontedly frenzied. He must have known the dog was there. He kept moving from side to side and tugging fearfully at his halter. This had lasted two hours, and, getting tired of the noise, I was beginning to fall asleep with my head on Dragon's side, when he gave a great howl and a spring. I fell into the straw, happily for me, for the next moment there was a fearful noise. Jehurun had got loose, and quivering down in my corner I could only make out from the fearful racket that the dog and horse were fighting. The one lashed out; the other, after one or two growls, ceased to do more than pant, and it seemed he had hold of the horse by the throat, and the latter vainly tried to rear and shake off the prodigious brute. The row was tremendous. Presently the door opened, Jehurun rushed out, carrying the dog with him, and knocking the farmer, who had come out from his bed to see what was the matter, over senseless in his passage.

I got up and ran to the door. There was a sort of twilight, by which I could distinguish the horse rearing and the dog holding on. I stumbled over Farmer Mason, but picked myself up and ran, and had resolved to stay no longer in this frightful place. The fight was coming to an end. The horse sank down; the dog, terribly wounded by the brute's forefeet, was unable to move.

"Good-bye, Dragon," quietly, and at a safe distance; and started off down the road in the opposite direction from the railway depot. It was the last I ever saw of Farmer Mason and his wife.

LEPP'S COCOA.—GRATEFUL AND COMFORTING.—"By a thorough knowledge of the natural laws which govern the operations of digestion and nutrition, and by careful application of the fine properties of well selected cocoa, Mr. Epps has provided our breakfast tables with a delicately flavored beverage which may save us many heavy doctors' bills. It is by judicious use of such articles of diet that a constitution may be gradually built up until strong enough to resist every tendency to disease. Hundreds of subtle maladies are floating around us ready to attack us wherever there is a weak point. We may escape many a fatal shaft by keeping ourselves well fortified with pure blood and properly nourished frame."—Civil Service Gazette.
