USING UP THE SCRAPS.

ing Allowed to Go to Waste in These Days of Enterprise.

From the Battimore Sun.

Every resident can recollect the immense piles of waste tin from the can shops that used to glitter in the hollows of East Baltimore and upon every dump in that section a dozen years The first use of this waste was by a poor ago. The first use of this waste was by a poor man from the North who obtained permission to set up a machine in Smith & Wick's can shop in this city. Here he bought scraps for almost nothing, and cut out tin button stock to send East. Afterward the stamps for snaping the buttons were introduced, and the individual reaped a large fortune from his enterprise. The next use of tin scrap was for smelting. The tin at first refused to flow when subjected to the heat of the furnace. It was discovered that it would pay to cut the tin ceating eliemically, and that the sheet from would then smelt and flow. Out of this grew the mannfacture of sash-weights, and few of them are now found that are not made from tin scrap. Several foundries use all that is made. The scrap was pounded into wads by stamping it in large buckets.

A most interesting feature of all businesses using leather is that not one particle of the leather is wasted. Our shoe factories alone sell annually fifty tons of waste. This goes mainly to a firm in Philadelphia, who pay $7 at on for it. A large amount is sent to Lynn, Mass., and other points, where the leather is ground up, mixed with a medium, and pressed into buttons. The remainder that is not so used is treated chemically, turned into a gelatinous mass, dried, and ground into fertilizing dust. The sole leather pieces that fall from the block of the heel stamper are sorted into two heaps. The very small pieces are put with the fine waste. The scraps, presenting a surface of a couple of square inches, are barrelled up and sold to parties in New York or Boston at I cent a pound, where they are put through a peculiar machine. This anstrument splits the pieces nearly through. Then it opens the piece thus cut like a book. Thence it is delivered from between rollers, and is large enough to be again sent to the factory to be cut up into heel litts.

There is another small but important industry which goes to prove how ordinary wastes of business may be turned to account. This is a work of long standing, th

Building the Pyramids.

Mr. Baker, one of the chief engineers of the Forth Bridge, lecturing the other night, gave a very graphic and interesting account of that stupendous work. The men who reared the stupendous work. The men who reared the great Pyramid must have possessed no little engineering skill, but the modern engineer looks on the Pyramid as a very little thing. Mr. Baker said he had sometimes looked at the Pyramids from a contractor's point of view, and he would be glad to take a contract to build the great Pyramid in six years, for the sum of £3,000,000 sterling. It contained about 7,000,000 tons of stone. If, with steam Titans and cranes that can handle and set blocks of concrete of a hundred tons weight as easily as a briellayer sets a small brick, six years would be necessary to rear the great Pyramid, how long did its construction occupy the ancient Egyptians? Their work was designed to last forever, and it will doubtless exist when many of our marvellous comexist when many of our marvellous com-binations of girders will shrivel into a heap of Mr. Philip D. Hart has this week placed in his residence, Albion-street, a parlor grand (baby grand) piano of the very finest description that can be purchased. It is manufactured by Wm. Knabe & Co., Baltimore, Md., and was purchased from Joseph Ruse & Co., 68 King-street, Toronto, sole agent for Canada. The instrument, like all of Knabe's grand pianos, is constructed with the improved overstrung scale, agrafe throughout, three stringed, and with the improved double repeating action. Upon the whole, it is undoubtedly the most superior instrument that ever came to the city. Being musically inclined, we do not know who would appreciate such an instrument better than Mr. and Mrs. Hart. The "Knabe" ranks with the Steinway, but in the States is considered superior. The price paid for the instrument was $900,—Brantford Daily Courier.
