WEDNESDAY, NOVEMBER 29TH, 1899. splendid crop of apples will not bring the eash returns that our farmers had hoped. Shipments to the English market to date are last season, but this advance is not sufficiently heavy to glut the market, and we have low prices. The fruit is arriving in poor prime fruit. It is possible that the live emulation of this practice is what ing the market. It is known that not of December.

Articles has be no moi grievances. The Cum is killing the market. It is known that not every barrel in a lot can be opened for inction, but the sale of that lot in the auction rooms is governed by the quality of the fruit in the barrel that is opened. Packers should therefore be most careful to pack shipment of over-ripe, soft fruit is another practice that must be discarded if the best results are to be obtained in our foreign markets. This fruit can be sold to far better advantage in the local markets, and by doing this the edge will be kept on the foreign sales. The transportation companies are also largely responsible for the condition of marketed fruit. Rough handling will do much to spoil the sale of any consignment, while poorly ventilated scamers constitute a much great generated scamers constitute and the results of great grea long run, injure the sale of their own fruit

London, Nov. 23.—The Star displays a Vienna despatch containing the information from St. Petersburg that the Russians bave occupied Herst. This is not improbable as it coincides with the forecaste which the Times published ten days ago from its St. Petersburg extraspondent. The report, however, lacks definiteness and official authority. It may easily be that a curprise of this kind has been carefully pianned for the entertainment of the Queen's guests at Windsor and it would be well timed for the critical moment of the British campaign in South Africa.
