HALF HOURS WITH THE EMINENT.

Our Reporter Interviews the Author of the New Drama—Sketch of J. L. Ashton—Career of the Play-wright—His Early Life—Ups and Downs in the World, &c., &c., &c.

Our readers are by this time tolerably well acquainted with the new dramatization of Mrs. Fleming's novel of "Wedded, Yet No Wife," as produced at the Academy of Music by Mr. Nannery's Company, under the immediate supervision of the author. We need not speak here of the merits or demerits of that drama, but a brief sketch of the dramatist and his early life may not be uninteresting to the public. Our reporter was therefore deputed on Wednesday last to hunt Mr. Ashton up. He found him pacing the new pitch-pine floor of Stewart's Pharmacopoly in a state of violent and uncontrollable excitement. It appears that the urbane vender of drugs and medicines had been indulging his habit of criticizing Mr. Ashton's literary and dramatic works and Mr. Ashton was endeavoring to explain certain matters, when our reporter entered the Pharmacy, and courteously bowing to the company seated himself on the inviting corner of an unbleached sponge and awaited patiently the progress of the discussion. A connoisseur of art coming into the Pharmacoly at this moment to inspect the abaster ornaments on the show-case interrupted the immediate conversation, when our commissioner took occasion to remark to the fever-wrought author that it was a fine day and that the sun appeared to shine with considerable lustre. "And yet sir," went on our reporter, "we have had hotter days here."

"True, true," coldly replied Mr. Ashton, "but, to quote the elegant phraseology of the Daily News, we should not grumble, let us remember the tiny leaflet in the dell and the velvet petal in the green-house, consider again how doth the meandering wasp delight to bark and bite for such is the nature and genus of the species insectivara. Therefore you see sir that I am right."

"You are, sir, you are," cried our special warmly as he balanced himself carefully with one hand while with the other he removed a shingle nail from the infusorial bath accompaniment. "You are, sir, and that reminds me of my mission. Your name is Ashton, I think, J. L. Ashton, is it not?

"It is sir, Ashton is my name," meekly responded Mr. Armstrong.

"And yet the early stages of our city's history have within the archives your name registered as John Armstrong. Explain this apparent paradox."

"I will, sir; you see my early life was spent in this city. I was brought up a poor printer and served my time in Mr. George W. Day's mammoth printing job office, when he kept on the corner of Germain street and the Market place. My name then was Armstrong. My brother is a printer also and he worked on the News. He is not as smart as I am, and his health is bad. At a tender age I sought the congenial atmosphere of the theatre and its surroundings. My companions were the supes of the theatres, and my comrades were the doorkeepers and bill posters. One bright morning in May, tired of the type and ink room I presented myself before Mr. J. W. Lanergan and asked him for something to do. I had previous to this been a prominent amateur and had played with varying success Macbeth, Jack Sheppard, Richard the Third and Hamlet. I was, therefore, well versed in Shakespeare. Mr. Lanergan eyed me from head to foot, and asked me if I had weighed well the awful responsibility of the position I was about to undertake. I told him I had and I was at once offered the post of basket-boy in the Lyceum. I have carried the basket at different times, for Wyzeman Marshall, C. W. Couldock, Joseph Proctor, Charles Dillon, Claude Hamilton, and E. A. Sothern, and have received more kicks than half-pence for my pains. I merely mention this in order to teach young actors the lesson I have learned and to show them how much must be done before the position I hold now may be reached. Seven years ago I made my first appearance on the stage in the character of the Second Grave Digger in Hamlet. My entrance on the stage was greeted with shouts of laughter and when I retired the delight of the audience was intense. In rapid succession I appeared as a footman, a waiter at an inn, an Indian, an Irish peasant and numberless other minor and difficult characters, and with great success. My name as an actor being firmly established I next turned my attention to writing plays from old novels."

"Why did you call yourself Ashton?"

"Because I had made a vow, like Col. Morier, in the Lady of Lyons, not to resume my own name until I had earned a reputation lasting and endurable. My first play was the alteration of a drama then running with great success in Boston. I changed its form completely, modernized it, adapted modern suits, and cut out the old "shape" and scenes, and with a new name I put it on the boards. The result was that those very papers which had been loud in their praise of the old drama, roundly abused the new play and criticised me very unfairly. You see, sir, there has ever been a desire among the critics to crush me. But, sir, I shall outlive them all. My plays are all adaptations from stories. These came better and I am thus saved the trouble of improvising a plot. I wrote the whole of 'Wedded, yet no Wife' in less than half an hour."

"I have no doubt of it. I would have guessed less time."

"When I played this play in Halifax," resumed the author, "the press abused it savagely, and the Reporter said that Miss Savory alone saved the piece from entire destruction. You will see, sir, how partial was the criticism when I tell you that Miss Savory did not speak above half a dozen lines of the original text, but continually substituted words of her own."

"It is well she did that, Mr. Ashton, for had she followed the text more closely, even her fine acting and beautiful appearance would hardly have saved the piece."

"Joking aside, sir, but you do not see the difficulties with which I have to contend. I possess no abilities or intelligence, and yet I have to write plays. My lot is a hard one."

"Your lot of plays, you say, is a hard one. I don't in the least doubt it."

"No, no; you misunderstand me. The plays are all right, it's the public, they don't and won't appreciate my efforts. I am a crushed author, sir, a violently crushed author."

"Have you any other plays in course of construction?"

"Yes, I am dramatizing Miss Braddon's new novel of "Publicans and Sinners." It promises to be a great story, and there is much food for the skilful dramatist. As a proof of the popularity of "Wedded, yet no Wife," I may remark that at this moment it is running star engagements in no less than twenty-one of the principal American theatres, and I am daily in the receipt of a royalty of $5 a head from each one playing it in America. My other plays also yield me quite an income. By my plays alone I own a handsome house, several thousand acres of good land and a fine set of furniture to boot. I think of coming down here next year with a company to play exclusively my own plays."

"Does Mrs. Fleming like your dramatization of her story?"

"She is charmed with it, and on both nights of its representation will be present. She has thanked me and highly complimented my work."

"Where do you play this coming season?"

"I go to Providence, Rhode Island, at the repeated solicitation of the manager. I am to fill the responsible position of stage manager and first old man. I leave St. John on Monday morning in the boat. Have you any further questions to ask me."

"None, sir," remarked our interviewer sadly as he fell off the sponge into a tumbler holder. "No more to-day, I beg of you. I wish you a very good afternoon, sir."

"Good day."

And our reporter slowly strutted up and down King street. Mr. Ashton is a tall, good looking gentleman with homespun clothes on. His features are regularly drawn. He wears a small moustache and no whiskers of any calibre whatever. His conversation is more vigorous than elegant and his descriptive powers are singularly forcible. He can deliver programmes much better than he can write plays.

CONCENTRATED Essence of Jamaica Ginger.

THIS popular preparation possesses all the most valuable properties of JAMAICA GINGER, in a highly concentrated form. It is an Excellent Tonic, and is particularly recommended in that low state of the system resulting from the attacks of Fevers and other debilitating diseases, and in those cases of "Weak Stomach" so prevalent among persons advanced in years, as it gives tone and strength to the Digestive Organs, and by its stimulative influence in the stomach, diffuses a cordial warmth, thereby gradually exhilirating the whole system. It will be found highly beneficial in cases where a predisposition to Rheumatic affections, or of Gout, exists, and to the sufferer from Dyspepsia. It speedily removes Colic, Cramps and pain in the Stomach, and Dysentery.

NOTICE TO INVESTORS.

THE attention of the investing public is called to the limited remainder of the NORTHERN PACIFIC RAILROAD SEVEN-THIRTY LOAN. Of the $9,000,000 of this loan unsold on the first of June last, less than $5,000,000 now remains, and this balance will soon be absorbed, after which the Company has resolved to issue only six per cent. bonds.

There are now between 500 and 600 miles of the road in regular operation, with a growing traffic; surveys and construction are progressing satisfactorily: the survey prosecuted the present season in connection with the Stanley military expedition has resulted in the location of an excellent line through Western Dakota and Eastern Montana, and the Company has advertised for proposals for grading and bridging the Yellowstone Division, extending 205 miles from Bismarck, at the crossing of the Missouri River to the crossing of the Yellowstone in Montana. The Company's land (amounting to more than 20,000 acres per mile of road) are selling to settlers at an average price of nearly six dollars per acre, and the proceeds of land sales constitute a Sinking Fund for the repurchase and cancelations of first mortgage bonds.

The Company's seven and three-tenths per cent. gold bonds, the last of which are now offered, yield over 8½ per cent. per annum at the present price of gold.

All marketable securities are received in exchange at current rates, and full information furnished on inquiry.
