

of the 63rd Halifax Rifles were tied seven times, in a contest for the first and second prizes. The latter however, finally won the first prize.

The prizes to be awarded the competitors making the highest aggregate scores were not made known last evening.

The programme of the match was slightly altered. It was at first provided that there should be three competitions with the small bore rifle, but the council yesterday morning very wisely, we think, decided that there should be only one competition with this weapon. The Enfield rifle is the instrument which our volunteers, if they are ever in action, will be required to handle, and they should be especially trained in its use.
