VICIOUS SOWS.

Had three young sows in a bunch of store hogs. Was preparing them for market. The market kept going down, so I decided to breed them. They had been well fed and nearly ready for market. The first two came in the 20th of March. One had eight pigs; the other ten. The third came in March 29th, and had thirteen pigs, all strong and hardy. The first one seemed somewhat vicious, but I managed to tame her down, and after a while she became reconciled. The second one was more vicious than the first, but after a good deal of care and kindness, I got her to take her litter, too. The third one was furious, and would kill the little ones as fast as they were born. Kept them away for a while, but that did not seem to make any difference. I then tried to raise them on cow's milk, but the third died. Now, I'd like to know—

1. Why because they were too highly fed and without exercise that they were so vicious?

2. What proportion of milk should young pigs get that had never nursed?

Ans.—It is hardly likely that the viciousness of these sows was owing to their being so well fed. Sows with their first litters are usually more nervous at first than later on in life. A sow who has become accustomed before birth to regard the man who comes about her as her friend, but even then, sows will show plainly that they wish to be left alone, as is natural, and generally best. Some sows are of the ill-natured kind, and probably yours were of that type. When sows seem furious, and determined to eat their pigs, the following treatment has been recommended: "Give her pork enough to satisfy her, and salt pork is better than fresh, as it will take less. Cut into thin slices, and feed them one at a time until she will eat no more, and she will let the pigs alone afterwards." A very vicious brute should be fattened off.

able to consult, recommend simply warm, whole milk, for pigs that have to be raised by hand. If pigs have never nursed, it is doubtful whether anything can be got to take the place of the laxative first milk of the mother. The milk of a newly-calved cow might, if available, be tried.

COATING FOR CEMENT—SCRATCHES.

1. I veneered my house with cement blocks last summer. Is there any way to paint the corner blocks? What kind of paint would be best to use? How would I have to put it on? I would like to have it white.

2. I would also like to have a good remedy for scratches on horses.

B. S.

Ans.—1. Ordinary paint should not be applied to concrete structures. Linseed oil combines with the alkali in cement, forming a sort of soap, and disintegrating the surface. Special coatings for cement are sold at $1.50 per gallon. A gallon will cover 800 square feet.

2. For a serious case of scratches, give a purgative ball (except with mare in foal) of 8 drams aloes and 2 drams ginger. Apply hot linseed-meal poultices to the pasterns for two days and two nights, changing the poultices about every eight hours. Then dress the parts three times daily with oxide-of-zinc ointment, to which has been added 20 drops carbolic acid to each ounce. Do not wash. If the parts get wet or muddy, rub well until dry, or allow the mud to dry, and then brush off, if you have not time to rub.
