"azoturia." The edematous swelling of the scrotum may or may not be the result of his previous illness. Whatever the cause of the dropsical swelling you had better follow out this line of treatment: Internally give morning and evening one dram of iodide of potash. This may be dissolved in two quarts of drinking water, and continued for ten days. Then it should be discontinued for a few days; then repeat as before. Externally, gently rub into the swollen parts, once daily a little iodine ointment. If in about a week the ointment has caused the skin to become rough and sore, discontinue its use for a few days until the skin again becomes normal. Feed him well and allow plenty of exercise. As his general condition improves the swelling will disappear.

OX HAS LYMPHANGITIS

What is wrong with my ox? One morning a few days ago as I turned him out to pasture I noticed that his right hind leg was a good deal swollen from the hock to the foot, but he is only perceptibly lame. Is it all right to work him? What can I do? I have hardly worked him all summer.—C. R. B.

Ans.—Your ox has an attack of lymphangitis, which has been brought about by too liberal feeding of grain. If the swelling is there when you see this reply to your query we advise you to give him a physic of epsom salts, from one to one and a half lbs., according to his size; molasses, one pound; powdered ginger, one ounce. Dissolve all the ingredients in not less than three pints of warm water and give at one dose as a drench. If the leg is sore to the touch, bathe with warm water often.

COLT HAS SWOLLEN GLANDS IN THROAT

Colt had distemper last spring. Throat swelled and broke outside. Now there are still small lumps in throat. Kindly prescribe.—SUBSCRIBER.

Ans.—The glands in the region of the throat often remain enlarged for a long time after recovery from distemper, but as the colt grows older and matures the swellings become absorbed, and the throat assumes its normal condition. However, you may assist nature by gently rubbing into the swollen glands once daily for a week a little iodine ointment. Discontinue its use for a few days, if the parts become sore.

PROTECTION OF FORESTS FROM FIRE

The problem of protecting the forests of the country from fires is receiving considerable attention from associations of private owners, associations of lumber companies, State forest wardens, and the National Government, and the United States Department of Agriculture has just issued Bulletin 82, Forest Service, relating to the subject. In spite of all that has been done, however, probably 60 per cent. of the private forests have no adequate system of protection.

There are three classes of forest fires: Surface fires, which burn the surface layer of leaves, dry grass, brush and small trees; ground fires, burning the deep accumulation of vegetable mold; and crown fires, which accompany surface fires and burn the crowns of the trees. Surface fires are the most common and may start under ordinary dry conditions. The severity of the fire, of course, depends largely on the amount of accumulated leaves and brush and the strength of the wind. Surface fires kill seedlings and young trees, but in many cases do not kill the larger trees. Under some conditions
