HOW CHICKENS ARE GROOMED.

Vigorously Tubbed, Legs Brushed and Combs Oiled.

To prepare a bird for exhibition at one of the big poultry shows involves long training, careful care in order to insure perfect physical condition, a thorough bath and many other little attentions.

The careless exhibitor deludes himself when he thinks that two or three weeks conditioning is all that is necessary to prepare his specimens for the show room. Although it cannot be denied that in even two or three weeks time a great deal can be done to improve the appearance of a bird.

The careful exhibitor keeps a vigilant eye on his exceptional specimens, giving them extra care from the time of their hatch, and seeing that his adult exhibition stock have a good rest and plenty of rich and nourishing food during the molt so that they will not suffer from this drain on their vitality.

They are kept housed during bad weather, too, says a writer in Suburban Life, for when the feathers get wet and are dried in the open the plumage becomes faded and dull.

Having decided on the birds to exhibit, they are removed to the training cages, which are similar to but larger than those used at the poultry shows. These cages should be thirty inches square and twenty-seven inches high for females. Those for males should be thirty-three inches high.

Each bird is looked over for such disqualifications as the "standard" may prohibit—feathers on the legs of clean legged varieties, white in the ear lobes of Plymouth Rocks and in the faces of young birds in the Mediterranean class, such as Leghorns, Minorcas, and so on.

Any disqualified birds are put aside, for it is useless to attempt to fake a bird that an experienced judge is to handle. Washing the plumage, removing old scales from the legs and training are entirely legitimate and exhibitors are supposed to take advantage of every opportunity to improve the appearance of their birds as much as possible in this way.

One of the objects of placing the birds in the training cages is to accustom them to being confined and to seeing visitors. When penned in these cages the birds are visited frequently and talked to, and as they become accustomed to being visited a cane or a judging stick is used to move them about gently and is passed down the neck and over the back.

It also improves the birds to handle them, so that when being judged they will not get wild and frightened. Frequently the lack of confidence from not being accustomed to cooping and handling has caused an excellent specimen to lose the prize award.

When visiting the training cages the breeder carries a choice morsel of food with which the bird can be coaxed to the front of the cage. In this way a habit of stepping forward in an expectant mood formed and with it the last step of training is accomplished.

Treatment of rough legs begins at least three weeks before the show by dipping the bird's legs into a mixture in the proportion of a teaspoonful of cold tea vegetable can is excellent for this purpose.

The bird's legs are to be scrubbed with soap and water immediately after being dipped into the oil, using a small brush, then dried and afterward rubbed with vaseline. It often is advantageous to wash the legs with a strip of old cotton cloth to prevent the plumage from becoming soiled with the vaseline when the birds go to roost.

Breeders have found that in shipping birds to the show rooms it is best to use individual shipping boxes except in the case of females, which are to be shown in the same pen. Experience has proved that if these hens are separated they will be likely to fight among themselves when placed in the exhibition hall, and so injure their plumage and possibly combs.

Before being placed in the show pen the various specimens are carefully wiped in order to remove any dust or dirt which may have accumulated on the plumage. The final attention comes just before the bird goes before the judge, when the breeder wipes the legs with a cloth which has been moistened with olive oil, while the head, the comb and the wattles are gone over with a sponge that has been dipped in a mixture consisting of two parts of olive oil and one part of vinegar.

The purpose of this application is to brighten the comb and bring out the color to the best advantage. An additional attention which is sometimes given consists of applying a little talcum powder to the ear lobes.

A. M. E. CHURCH

Y.M.C.A. Class Gave a Fine Entertainment.

Last night a class from the Y. M. C. A. gave an interesting entertainment at the St. Paul's A. M. E. Church, in aid of the church funds. A large audience was present, and it showed its appreciation of the efforts of the entertainers in a most emphatic manner. Mr. T. F. Best, Secretary of the Y. M. C. A., was chairman. He gave an address and sang a solo. Mr. A. K. Brown and Mr. J. Brethour also sang solos, and Mr. F. Sheppard spoke briefly.

The feature of the programme, however, was the cabinet work of Prof. D. M. Barton, who was assisted by Mr. E. Linkert.

Rev. Mr. Henderson, pastor of the church, tendered the visitors a vote of thanks from the church officials.

SCOTLAND.

International Lodge Remembers the Land of the Heather.

The Scotch members of International Lodge, I. O. G. S. Morrison; song, "Flow Gently, Sweet Afton," J. Porteous; piano solo, "Scotch Airs," Miss Lily Boniface; song, "Comin' Thro' the Rye," Miss Bessie Pringle; song, "Corn Rigs," D. Campbell; comic song, "I Was a Hero, Too," Scott Morrison; recitation, "Burns Address to Edinburgh," W. H. Anderson; song, "Scots Wha Hae," J. Rosie.

Next Friday evening the quarterly election of officers will take place, when every member is expected to be present.

Endurance.

Rankin—Do you think you could ride ninety-eight miles on horseback in seven hours straight?

Eyle—No, but I walked the floor nine hours straight with a squalling baby last night, and I'm willing to bet that no President of the United States can do that.
