Love Finds the Way

"All in fifties?" said the baron, rather astonished.

astonished.

"Yee." said the chevalier, quietly. "I drew them so in deference to a wish of the bank. They like fifties."

"All right," said the baron, who would have been slightly suspicious had not the apparent shrewdness of the chevalier in bating down his interest, and his avarice in angling for a bribe deceivid him.

"All right; there is the cheque. Four thousand pounds."

"A thousand thanks," said the chevalier, turning over the valuable morsel of paper and slipping it into his pocket. "Have you heard anything of the valuable gems you were so unfortunate as to lose?" he asked, hat in hand.

"No," said the baron, piteously. "They are clean gone. The police cannot trace the thief at all. Why, didn't you lose some pearls?"

"Yes," said the chevalier, quietly, shrugging his shoulders. "Rare ones, too. They were a present from his Majesty, and I was sorely grieved. I did not know your London was so full of thieves."

"Ha!" groaned the baron. "It is a lask you for the money," "Here it is, confound you!" retorted the other, flinging a roll of notes upon the pearly of the word."

"Here it is, confound you!" retorted the other, flinging a roll of notes upon the pearly of the word. The pearly of the word, said melchior, shifting his hand under the cloak, "and you will have made your last move, Charlie. I ask you for the money."

"Here it is, confound you!" retorted the other, flinging a roll of notes upon the pearly of the word. The pearly of the pearly of the money."

"Here it is, confound you!" retorted the other, flinging a roll of notes upon the pearly of the pearly of the money."

dow, upon the table was spread a cloth with a loaf of bread and some cheese lying upon it.

There were two plates, and Melchior caught up one and examined it.

"He has eaten nothing since yesterday." he murmured. "Cli!"

"I am here," said the youth, entering the room at the moment.

"Come, time flies," said Melchior; "eat and quickly. If anyone knocks, rapagainst the wall for me," and snatching up a slice of bread, he ran upstairs. A strange excitement, wonderfully strange to him, seemed to have possessed him, and as he entered the small room which served him for a sleeping room, he dashed towards the glass and grinned at it with a sardonic sort of triumph.

"Do, I look so thoroughly honest or "Open, in the king," reach."

room, he dashed towards the glass and grinned at it with a sardonic sort of triumph.

"Do. I look so thoroughly honest, or is all the world a fool? Ha! ha! What will the baron say, when he comes to change my pretty little pictures?"
Overcome, seemingly, by the picture which his question suggested, he sat on the edge of the bed and gave way to a low. unnatural fit of laughing.

"But come, this won't do. Ten o'clock and no Mo, no Charlie yet. I am not dressed to play my new part, either. Where are the clothes?"

With a sudden return to his old, quick, collected manner, he commenced removing his chevalier costume, and proceeded to don the garments of Dr. Ambrose. In an almost incredibly short time, his disguise was complete, and thrusting his late costume into a small bag, which was already filled with various articles, he looked around the room, and then with a nod of farewell went out, closing the door after him.

In the room below. Cli stood leaning against the table, his arms folded, his head drooped upon his breast.

The sudden re-entry of his master awakened him.

"Are we going?" he said, looking up, "Yes," said Melchior. "It is nearly the said in the second of the loof pouring from his least provided to the Jew, who, still uttering the most frightful screams, was crawling to the door, at which Charlie was already fimbling, the blood pouring from his face preventing him from seeing the late.

"Here," said the chevalier, and he drew a pocketbook from his pocket and the visitor pulled in.
"How much?" asked the baron.
"Three thousand," replied the cheva-like." "What is newcomer. "What's up, Melchior?" "What's up, Welchior?" "Neithior?" "Neithior." "

"Nothing," replied that gentleman, sliding the heavy bolts into the thick door, and walking to the table with a firm step. "You are late. Where is the money?"

firm step. "You are late. Where is the money?"

"Hele. But you don't seem to be overprofuse in your welcome," said Charlie, sullenly. "You might be a little civil, I think, after all we've done. A man don't care to risk his neck for nothing, and hard words into the bargain—eh, Mo?" and he turned to the Jew, who stood looking cunningly around, uneasily conscious of Melchior's piercing gaze.

too. They were a present from his Majesty, and I was sorely grieved. I did not know your London was so full of thieves."

"Ha!" groaned the baron. "It is a den of thieves. Vun is never safe. Who is to tell an honest man? And the deeds, my dear sir? Vhen shall I shee the deeds?"

"In three or four days," said the chevalier, anxious to be gone, and consulting his watch. "I am going out of town for a day or so, but will return in time to go over the deeds. Good morning, my dear baron, good morning!" Venetian chevalier left. the presence chamber of the capitalist, and escorted by three flunkies, got clear of the house.

A cabriolet was hailed at the end of the street and bidden to drive quickly to Oxford Circus.

Here the chevalier alighted, and waiting till the discharged vehicle had gotten out of sight, engaged another to drive him in the opposite direction—namely, to the bank.

Here the four-thousand-pound cheque was converted into good coin of the realm and the cabriolet ordered on to Bishopsgate street.

The curtain which had screened the one side had been removed, and the empty hampers and boxes were disclosed to view.

The room was empty, and he looked round before calling Cli with a sharp, suspicious air.

The cold bureau had been emptied of its contents and stood beneath the window, upon the table was spread a cloth with a loaf of bread and some cheese lying upon it.

There were two plates, and Melchior caught up one and examined it.

In the room below, Cli stood leaning against the table, his arms folded, his head drooped upon his breast.

The sudden re-entry of his master awakened him.

"Are we going:" he said, looking up, "Yes." said Melchior. "It is nearly finished. We await now only for the last two stones and the edifice will be complete. Hush, here comes one! Give me that cloak, quick!"

Cli reached the long, black cloak from a chair, and handed it to him. Melchior wrapped it round him and stole on tiptoe to the door.

There came a timid knock, and before it could be repeated the cloaked figure opened the door, and with a sharp pull dragged the Jew, for it was he, into the from.

"Not a word!" he said. sternly, as Mosses. alarmed by the sudden attack, but the boy would not move. "Come," said Melchior: "Come, "said Melchior to guick! There is not a moment to lose."

(Special Despatch to the Times.) London, Ont., June 25 .- A daring bur glary was prevented last night by the onesty of a negro named Sharp, from honesty of a negro named Sharp, from Woodstock. John Weaver, a well-known crook, had planned to rob Reid's whole sale store, and paid Sharp to stand ir front and kick the door if he saw a policeman coming. Sharp walked up and teld a police officer, and was told to carry out the affair as planned with Weaver. A special detective laid for Weaver and caught him coming from the building loaded with valuable goods He fought desperately, but was over powered, and in the Police Court this morning pleaded guilty and was remand CZAR'S VISIT.

Will Pay His Respects to Gustave at Stockholm.

St. Petersburg, June 25.-Emperor Nicholas left :Russian waters on the Imperial yacht Standart to-day for Stock holm on the first of the three foreign visits he will pay this summer. The trip to Sweden is a return of the visit of King Gustave to St. Petersburg at the time of the marriage of Prince Wilof King Gustave to St. Petersburg at the time of the marriage of Prince Wilhelm of Sweden. No high politics will be discussed at Stockholm, and the fact that Emperor Nicholas is going almost directly from Sweden to Poltava, to be present at the dedication of a monument to the Russo-Swedish dead who fell in the battle of Poltava two hundred years ago, is taken as an evidence that the ancient Russo-Swedish enmities have been completely blotted out, CARRIED TO DEATH. Ottawa, Ont., June 25.—Dr. W. F. King, Canadian Boundary Survey Commissioner, has received a teletelegram from British Columbia telling of the death of a young man named Sheppard, one of a survey party now remarking Alaska boundary. Sheppard, who lived in Nainaimo, was caught in an avalanche and carried down to the valley, two thousand feet below.

System

Poisoning CONSTIPATION

Do Not Be Satisfied With Temport Relief—Cleanse the System and Make Cure Lasting With DR. CHASE'S KIDNEY-LIVER PILLS.

Constipation begins with the bowels but it does not end there.

You must also consider the way it affects the liver, the kidneys, the digestive system, and in fact, the whole human body.

Toll must also consider the way it affects the liver, the kidneys, the digestive system, and in fact, the whole human body.

Headaches, backaches, aching limbs, indigestion, biliousness, kidney derangements and the most serious discases imaginable often have their beginning with constipation of the bowels.

There is one treatment which has a direct and combined action on the bowels, the liver and the kidneys and gets these organs into good working order in remarkably quick time, and that is Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills.

They afford relief quickly, but they do more than that. They positively cure constipation, and insure lasting regularity of the bowels by setting the liver right.
