WHAT A SUMMER CAMPAIGN MEANS!

Camp Lockman, April 5. The thermometer at one hundred and eight degrees in the shade, and inside the tent at nearly three days ago, was a warning of unmistakable cogency that "summer was coming." Since that time the heat has not been quite so great, but the hot winds, which set in about ten o'clock daily and last until sunset, are all but intolerable, charged as they are with dust of a revolting nature, which fills every pore and fires the blood—nature which seems to penetrate the inner mechanism of the body, as it does in reality force its way into the works of a watch—which renders all out-of-door exercise a sort of severe penitential infliction, and makes dwelling in tents utterly miserable and hopeless. By the time this letter reaches you—and when that may be, I have not the slightest notion you will be enjoying the rigours of the merry month of May, and in common with the rest of the English army, I shall be experiencing the pleasures of an Indian Summer; but already has the premonitory symptom of the latter satisfied me that campaigning can only be conducted at an enormous cost. The hottest day that comes, let some one who is sincerely desirous of understanding what the dry winds are like, repair to any iron-foundry in full activity, and let him stand in front of the fire when the furnace door is opened; but unless he can add to it the odours procurable by standing over the grating of a Strand cook shop in the dog-days, he will have but a poor idea of the nastiness of the blast, which, sweeping over burning sandy plains, covered with putrefying remains, whisks clouds of pulverized animal matter along with it, and rushes in dense yellow volumes all over the city and the plains around it.

To the increasing heat there is added length of days, greater power to the wind, and, if possible, more dust. Of the latter it is quite beyond the powers of writing to give a description. It is quite beyond the powers of writing to give a description. It is so fine and subtle that long after the causes which raised it have ceased to exert their influence, you may see it like a veil of gauze between your eyes and every object. The sun, while yet six or seven degrees above the horizon, is hid from sight by it as though the luminary were enveloped in a thick fog, and at early morning and evening this vapour of dust suspended high in the air seems like a rain cloud clinging to a hill side. When this dust is set rapidly in motion by a hot wind, and when the grosser sand, composed of minute fragments of talc, scales of mica, and earth, is compelled in quick successive waves through the heated atmosphere, the effect is quite sufficient to make one detest India for ever. Every article in your tent, your hair, eyes, and nose are filled and covered with this dust, which deposits a coating half an inch thick all over the tent.—London Times.

A NAVY'S FUNERAL AT BECKENHAM.

The readers of English Hearts and English Hands will be interested in the following account, which we quote from a weekly contemporary: "The quiet village of Beckenham was on Sunday the scene of unusual excitement, in consequence of the funeral of a 'navvy,' named Thomas Ward. It appears that the deceased was formerly employed by the Bromley Branch of the Mid-Kent Railway, and, having some months since attended the cottage Scripture readings of Miss Marsh, the authoress of 'The Life of Captain Huddley Vane,' became a convert. He succeeded in obtaining a situation at Watford Station, on the Northwestern Line, where, after four days only, he met with an accident, and was taken to one of the London hospitals to undergo amputation of one of his arms. After living there some time he communicated with Miss Marsh, who at once set off for the hospital, where she was afterwards constantly to be found ministering to him. After he had sufficiently recovered he was ordered to Beckenham for change of air, where, after he had been a few days, bleeding from the shoulder commenced, which terminated with his death. Miss Marsh, knowing how highly the deceased was esteemed among the rest of the 'navvies' on the line, caused a message to be sent to them that the Rev. F. Chalmers, the Rector of Beckenham, had kindly consented to preach a funeral sermon, prior to the interment of the body on Sunday. For about an hour previous to the commencement of the service, streams of the 'navvies' were to be seen wending their way to the church, and at half-past three the church was filled. Mr. Chalmers delivered a most impressive sermon to the congregation, taking for his text Acts viii. 2. At five o'clock the funeral procession passed into the church amid breathless silence, followed by ten mourners, including the mother of the deceased, relations, and friends, and about one hundred and thirty of the 'navvies,' walking four abreast, with their clean white shrouds. After the funeral service in the church and at the grave was concluded, a very forcible address was delivered by the worthy Rector. The mourners then returned to the rectory, and the 'navvies' were invited by Miss Marsh to a barn, where she had tea provided for them. At half-past seven, on visiting the barn, we found it fitted up with seats and lighted, and the whole of the men prepared for an evening's service, which commenced by their standing up and singing a hymn. A portion of the Scripture, commenting upon the text, was read by Miss Marsh, after which another hymn was sung, and then a concluding, forcible, and impressive prayer was offered up by Miss Marsh for all those present, especially the 'navvies.' At the conclusion, every one present, to the number of three hundred and seventy-six, shook hands with Miss Marsh, and received her farewell blessing."

FAT YOUNG LADIES AND VINEGAR.

Taken in moderation, there is no doubt that vinegar is beneficial; but in excess it impairs the digestive organs. Experiments on artificial digestion show that if the quantity of acid be diminished, digestion is retarded; if increased beyond a certain point, digestion is retarded. There is reason therefore, in the vulgar notion, unhappily too fondly relied on, that vinegar helps to keep down any alarming adiposity, and that ladies who dread the disappearance of their graceful outline in curves of plumpness expanding into "fat" may arrest so dreadful a result by liberal potations of vinegar; but they can only so arrest it at the far more dreadful expense of their health. The amount of acid which will keep them thin will destroy their digestive powers. Portal gives a case which should be a warning: "A few years ago a young lady in easy circumstances, enjoyed good health; she was very plump, had a good appetite, and a complexion blooming with roses and lilies. She began to look upon her plumpness with suspicion; for her mother was very fat, and she was afraid of becoming like her. Accordingly, she consulted a woman, who advised her to drink a glass of vinegar daily; the young lady followed the advice, and her plumpness diminished. She was delighted with the success of the experiment, and continued it for more than a month. She began to have a cough; but it was dry at its commencement, and was considered as a slight cold, which would go off. Meantime, from dry it became moist, a slow fever came on, and a difficulty of breathing, her body became lean, and wasted away, night sweats, swelling of the feet and of the legs succeeded, and a diarrhoea terminated her life."

THE ERUPTION OF VESUVIUS.

The terrible eruption of Mount Vesuvius, which commenced on the 26th of May, was still active at the latest advice. The following extracts from correspondence of the London Times show the character and progress of the eruption. NAPLES, May 31, 1858. Since Saturday the eruption has proceeded with constant increase, and presents a more magnificent spectacle. In my last letter I mentioned that there issued from the great basin of fire in the Atrio a single column of lava, which, at a tortuous course, was descending the declivity of the mountain. This stream has continued its course, varying in breadth according to the accidents of the ground, and seems now to direct itself in reality force its way into the works of a watch—a point between Purici and Torre del Greco, but a point between the latter and the former. It approaches close to the scattered farm-houses which lie above the town at the foot of the mountain, many of which it can scarcely fail to destroy.

In the afternoon of Saturday and Sunday two other streams of lava broke out of the great basin, and are descending the mountains toward the foot of the mountain. These streams seem to follow the direction of ravines, which run parallel to the ridge on which the Observatory and the Hermitage stand. These buildings have been saved from submersion by the lava by their great elevation, and the lava is following the direction of the lower ground at either side of them.

Last night, the spectacle was peculiarly grand and imposing. The lava was poured in increased quantity about the foot of the mountain already established, and being in a high state of incandescence, presented a peculiarly splendid appearance. At about eight o'clock an immense torrent of lava broke over the edge of the crater, and, in the direction of the Somma; it flowed down the declivity of the Somma as an immense torrent of liquid fire, and with such extraordinary rapidity that in less than an hour it had descended through a considerable portion of the mountain. Its progress was then retarded, partly by the diminished steepness of the ground, and partly by transverse ravines, which must be filled before the fluid can advance. Nothing could exceed the splendour of this torrent of liquid fire, forming the fourth principal stream of lava; but the most extraordinary burst of lava, which has been presented since the commencement of the eruption, took place soon after nine o'clock, when all the months ago it so simultaneously called into violent agitation, a violent and violent torrent of lava that the entire mountain seemed on fire; the various colours produced in different parts, owing probably in part to reflection, presented a beautiful and striking appearance. The lurid light diffused from this enormous burning mass rendered visible the subjacent country, the towns, the coast, and the bay.

On each night several thousands of persons, of all ranks, from the poor to the great, with curiosity, repair to the scene of this extraordinary spectacle. The darkness being complete, and the route in many parts difficult, each party is furnished with torches and lanterns, and the hundreds of torches flitting about between the streams of lava is most curious, presenting the appearance of multitudes of fire-flies. The hermitage, which is close to the great basin, and is a very good carriage road, and, as may be supposed, hundreds of vehicles of every description, from the calèche of the millionaire to the humble cart of the peasant, are employed every night. Donkeys parties abound, of which ladies do not form a part.

June 1.—The state of the mountain last night was nearly the same as on the preceding night, the eruption being attended with less violence. The great streams of lava, already described, continue to flow slowly in the same direction.

Part of the extraordinary splendour of the spectacle of Sunday night was due to the burning of forests over which the lava passed. The Neapolitans congratulate themselves on the circumstance of the lava having been directed into so many different directions, and in consequence of this had all been thrown into one channel, the destruction which must have ensued would have been tremendous.

The lava began to flow in 1855. At the end of one of the streams of lava, the Castellanese side of the Hermitage, there has been a serenity, I suppose to stop the lava. There were a saint and some priests in attendance.

ANOTHER EXPERIMENT BY MR. RAREY.

At a second lecture of exhibition of Mr. Rarey at Manchester, England, the following fact was related: The second subject for experiment was a great powerful cart-horse, which was the terror of Stafford. It was tolerably tame, and the owner of the horse, who was a little less violent, was determined if possible to tame him, and he was determined to do so. The groom led the horse to the enclosure, and suddenly the horse stood by the side of the groom, and by which he had led him forward. Some gentleman standing by told him to put on the halter again, as Mr. Rarey would require to hold him. But the groom steadfastly refused to do so, and was refused. It was as much as his life was worth to go into the enclosure, and no consideration would induce him to do so. The groom expressly stated that he had been told by the halter when he led the horse home, and such a direction could only have been given with a reckless desire to injure Mr. Rarey if possible, and that certainly the tameness of such an animal was not a slight feat. Moreover, the very presence of some one hundred people put Mr. Rarey at a disadvantage; and, accordingly, after the horse had made a rush at him, the audience with one accord withdrew. It is right distinctly to state, that notwithstanding the entreaties of his friends, Mr. Rarey never for a moment hesitated for he felt that he must either pledge to meet any horse and subdue him. In about five minutes after the company had withdrawn, it was known that Mr. Rarey had at last bridled the horse, and that he was in the enclosure. Beyond this, the course taken was much the same as in former instances,—for as Mr. Rarey says, horse nature is the same all over the world, and like common produce like results. But probably more witnessed without the thrill that we felt, the slight form of Mr. Rarey lying with his head beneath the hind legs of the great creature that was so resistive an hour before.

KNOWING WHAT THE WEATHER WILL BE.

"When you wish to know what the weather is to be, go out and select the smallest cloud you see; keep your eye upon it, and, if it decreases and is sure to be followed by fine weather; but if it increases in size, take your great coat with you, if you are going from home, for falling weather will be set off.—The reason is this:—When the air is becoming charged with electricity, you will see every cloud attracting all lesser ones towards it, until it gathers into a shower, and, on the contrary, when the air is passing off or diffusing itself, then a large cloud will be seen breaking to pieces and dissolving."
