James Baird

Jeffries-Johnson Clash at Reno.

In the long list of decisive ring battles through which the mantle worn by Sullivan has passed down the years to the bronzed shoulders of Jack Dempsey, there is no page to compare with that recounting the clash between Jack Johnson and Jim Jeffries in a sun-scorched arena at Reno on July 4, 1910.

Tex Rickard reared a great wooden saucer out on the plains of Nevada to accommodate the thousands who gathered from all over the country to see the tilt. He hung up a purse of $100,000, an unprecedented prize in those days.

Jeffries had not fought in more than five years. In the days of his reign in the ring, none had been his master and he had retired voluntarily with no defeats recorded against him. He was 35 years old, an age often reckoned as dotage in the realm of sport. To them the attempt on his part to restore the championship to the white race was an effort to which he had been induced by a constant clamor from those who despaired of Johnson ever being beaten by the crop of white hopes then seeking matches with him.

It was a great throng that assembled for the battle. Fringed around the great arena packed were rows of "birds' nests," built to shelter the sweet sisterhood from the Reno divorce colony. To them the Reno divorce colony was a charming break in the monotony of serving time. Jeffries trained down to 225 pounds to meet the sleek opponent three years his junior and then in magnificent physical trim. There was vigorous fighting at the start; with Jeffries crouching into serious mein and his opponent erect, grinning and talking as usual.

In the fifth round Jeffries sent a stray left that rocked Johnson and momentarily wiped away his smile. But the worried look on the black face passed, big white teeth again gleamed and through them came the admonition, "Don't rush, Mistah Jeff, doncha heah what a'm tellin' you?"

"Come on, Jeff, it's easy," he repeated often through the bitter rounds. Age and five years of freedom from the rigors of training told on Jeffries and the power of his blows grew less strong as the battle went on. In the 15th round—the last one—Johnson sent him to the ropes with a savage uppercut. Against the drooping head of the weary white man the black fighter then pounded away with one uppercut after another. The challenger had tried and failed and he fell taking punishment. His manager hopped into the ring to stop the slaughter, whereupon Rickard held up Johnson's hand in signal of victory.

Strange Marriage Customs in Afghan.

The Afghans got the idea of marrying more than one wife from the Persians, but like the Persians, too, they have found, to their dismay, that polygamy is nowadays more expensive than exciting.

Sometimes when the Amir wants to favor his faithful officials with presents, or perhaps to play practical jokes in certain cases, he distributes women among them; but these "gifts" often prove so troublesome that no great degree of gratitude is apparent among the recipients.

Family life, however, seems to be rather more intimate and private in Afghanistan than in Persia. Usually the young Afghan does not see his bride before the day of the wedding. Women relatives conduct the preliminary skirmishes, a sort of courtship by proxy which is later followed by negotiations between the bridegroom and his future father-in-law.

Marriage is celebrated at a very early age, especially in the northern parts of the country, where boys of 14 marry girls of not more than 10 or 12 years.

Amir Habibullah Khan (who was assassinated in 1919) had a harem of more than one hundred women, and among these strangely enough, were a few Europeans. The present Amir, Amanullah Khan, has but one wife. The women of Afghanistan are kept in more rigid seclusion and are more closely veiled than the women of any other Moslem land. The Afghan is notoriously jealous of his harem, and few indeed are the men of the outside world who have ever looked on the face of an Afghan woman of the towns. With the desert woman, wives and daughters of the nomads, it is different; the Koran permits them to go unveiled.

Like the Arab, the Afghan considers it unnecessary and even unwise that woman should learn to read or write. No girls are admitted to the bazaar schools and no mulishas are employed to teach them; and Afghanistan knows nothing of women teachers.
