Electricity in Making Textiles

Progress in the making of textiles has brought the industry to the use of electricity. Operators of textile mills find that electrically driven machinery is not only more economical, but that with its use they are able to produce cloth of superior quality.

The choice of the right kind of electrical apparatus is very important, and here, as in other industries, Westinghouse has been very largely depended upon to supply the dependable motors for which this great manufacturer is noted.

Westinghouse

A Woman of Fortitude.

Marie Antoinette, Josephine Jeanne de Lorraine, daughter of Francis I. of Lorraine, and of Marie Therese of Austria, was born on Nov. 2, 1755, at Vienna. In May, 1770, she married the Dauphin Louis, grandson of Louis XV. of France, and who in 1774 ascended the French throne as Louis XVI. She entered with spirit into the gaiety of French Court life, and drew down upon herself much popular hatred in consequence. Marie Antoinette was not really beautiful, but there is a tolerably unanimous opinion that she was handsome, lively, amiable, and thoroughly kind-hearted. Her husband, however, was by temper irascible, and allowed himself to be led away by the course of events, instead of striving to contend and direct them. Thus he was away by first one statesman and then another, until at last he saw himself divested of every shred of power by the Revolutionaries. After the deposition of Louis, all the elements of grandeur in the character of Marie Antoinette began to manifest themselves. She showed the greatest courage during the dastardly attacks made on the Royal Family; and appeared to be always more anxious for the safety of her husband and children, than for her own. She shared their captivity with noble resignation, and her demeanor under the most trying circumstances never lost an iota of its dignity. When brought to trial, her fortitude never forsook her, and her behaviour in almost unparalleled misfortunes has won for her not only the pity and sympathy, but the reverent admiration of posterity. For she bore herself with calmness, and met her death on the scaffold with unflinching bravery.

Strength of the French Army.

The report made by France to the League of Nations puts the strength of her home and colonial forces at 690,000 men. The cost of maintenance of this force for 1922 is given as 4,500,000,000 francs or, at the present rate of exchange, $484,760,000. In justification of this large army, the French statement points out that treaty obligations call for the employment of 160,000 men in Europe, the Near East and Africa, 92,000 of them on the Rhine. Colonial demands in Morocco, Algeria and Tunis, amount for 230,000 more on paper, though less than that number are actually in garrison. In France proper 335,000 men are stationed. Of the complement of 690,000 men, 100,000 are professional soldiers, 375,000 are conscripts, 205,000 natives of the colonies and 10,000 foreigners.

Mr. Garvia Tells.

LLOYD GEORGE TO GO.

Ever since Mr. Lloyd George formed his Coalition Government six years ago, Mr. J. E. Garvia, Editor of "The Observer," has been one of his strongest supporters. After the failure of the Geneva Conference he was seen to weaken in his support, and the turn of events in the Near East proved the last straw. Mr. Garvia called upon Mr. Lloyd George to resign and announced a series of drastic articles, of which the following is the first to appear in the "Observer."

THE FOUR POINTS.

"First, so far as the East is concerned, the Government has irrevocably lost the Great War which it was one of Mr. Lloyd George's chief purposes to win when he took office six years ago. Secondly, the necessity for a fundamental change in the personnel and system of our Government is unambiguously proved. Thirdly, the moribund Coalition is dead at last. Mustapha Kemal of all men having killed it as surely as the sparrow killed Cock-robin. Fourthly, the Premier's position has become quite untenable with any credit to himself or advantage to the country."

"We take the last point first. Mr. Lloyd George was a great leader in the war, and we shall never forget it. If he can only take up his mind at last, though late, to sacrifice his office in order to regain his influence, he will be a great leader once more in due time, and perhaps sooner than is thought by most persons now that his stock is low. But for the present his public usefulness is exhausted. For so infinitely clever a man it is strange that he has made the old stale mistake of so many of his predecessors. He has lingered too long and he has outstayed his luck."

"If he now endeavoured to extend his tenure still more abnormally, he would find the ground quietly but firmly cut from under his feet by a majority which is not his own and now means at no distant date to have another head. Unionist unmistakably mean to unite. They know that they can now do better fighting on separate—even if paralled—lines, than if they went to the polls under Mr. Lloyd George's personal leadership. That attitude is inevitable. Liberals in the constituencies will be unmistakably re-united in their turn. Nothing the Premier can now attempt would sufficiently arrest that process. The main currents of events at home, as abroad, have passed beyond his control."

NOT THE MAN HE WAS.

"The reasons for this anti-climax are obvious. Alone of living statesmen the Premier has been seventeen years in office. When he should not expect to continue forever, it might seem strange that he did not go out long since—in circumstances which would have ensured his speedier and more powerful return. The thing is explicable. Eight of his seventeen years in office have been equal to more than an ordinary generation of wear and tear. No mortal man could stand it and remain as good as he was. Neither in insight for home and foreign politics nor in any kind of consecutive direct energy is he equal, or anything like equal, to the man he was at his best."

"Resilient on the surface at call, capable as at Genoa of magnificent dramatic demonstrations, he follows these ebullitions by a manner of lethargy; for he is all the time fundamentally fatigued in the way that makes men incapable of really fresh thought, of vital insight, and of steady concentrated application. Two years ago, and often since, we have urged him for his own sake to withdraw. We pressed that course on him again after Sir George Younger gave him contingent notice to quit. Unable as a Premier in custody, and a faded one, to be true to himself, or to follow up any decisive instinct of his mind, he had his last chance at Genoa, and he threw it away by subsequent inactivity."

"THE MORNING POST."

"The Morning Post," the origin of the "Die-Hard" Conservatives, whose action at the Carlton Club Meeting led to Mr. Lloyd George's resignation and the assumption of office by Mr. Bonar Law, has the following caustic reference to Mr. Garvia and the late Premier:

"For a good many years now, Mr. Garvia has industriously played the part of charwoman of 10, Downing Street. Whatever has happened during the week, Mr. Garvia has come in on the Sunday with his stop pall and his mop, and has given the place, what is called in domestic circles, a thorough cleaning. Even when Mr. Lloyd George brought in his Sinn Fein and Bolshevik friends, to make a sad mess with their job-matted boots, Mr. Garvia did not murmur; any dirt that he could not get rid of otherwise he discreetly swept under the bed. And so it came about that however disreputable the house might appear by the Saturday night it always looked as bright as a new pin on Sunday morning. But Mr. Garvia, who has cleaned up so many messes without a murmur, has given notice at last."

"The Observer" contains that notice in writing over we dare not say how many columns of large print. For not only does the charwoman give us

A New and Better Ironing Board

"The Rid-Jid Ironing Table is as steady as a bridge—it will not wobble, sway, bend or creep when you iron. You can sit on the end and it will not even tilt. No more propping an old board up on two chairs—backs and having to lift it each time you wish to iron a skirt or petticoat. The Rid-Jid stands firm on its own foundation, and is so constructed that a full length skirt may be slipped on over the end. In spite of its marvellous rigidity, the Rid-Jid is lighter than any other ironing board made. It closes as compactly as a pocket-knife. We would be glad to have you stop in and see it."
