Many School Children are Pale, Weak and Nervous.

Debilitated and Exhausted in Mind and Body—Dr. Chase's Nerve Food is Surprisingly Beneficial for Children.

The severe and ever-increasing strain of competitive examinations coming at a time when every boy and girl is undergoing trying physiological changes does much towards making mental and physical wrecks of school children. Run down in health, with the blood thin and watery and the nervous system exhausted, children have no chance to escape the many ills that beset a feeble body. There is no treatment known to science that so naturally and thoroughly restores strength and vitality to the nervous system as Dr. Chase's Nerve Food. It makes parents happy by bringing back the color to the faces and the strength and elasticity to the bodies of their pale, puny children.

Mrs. S. Dempsey, Albany, Ont., writes:—"My little granddaughter, nine years old, was pale and weak, she had no appetite and seemed to be gradually growing weaker. Dr. Chase's Nerve Food proved invaluable in her case, restoring health and color and making her strong and well."

VEST'S TRIBUTE TO THE DOG.

Showing the Effect Eloquence Will Have Upon a Jury.

One of the most eloquent tributes ever paid to the dog was delivered by Senator Vest of Missouri some years ago. He was attending court in country town, and while waiting for the trial of a case in which he was interested he was urged by the attorneys in a dog case to help them. He was paid a fee of $250 by the plaintiff. Vest's evidence was introduced to show that the defendant had shot the dog in malice, while other evidence went to show that the dog had attacked defendant. Vest took no part in the trial and was not disposed to speak. The attorneys, however, urged him to make a speech, else their client would not think he had earned his fee. Being thus urged, he arose, scanned the face of each juror for a moment and said: "Gentlemen of the jury, the best friend a man has is his dog. His son or daughter that he has reared with loving care may prove ungrateful. Those who are nearest and dearest to us, those whom we trust with our happiness and good name, may become traitors to their faith. The money that a man has he may lose. It flies away from him, perhaps when he needs it most. A man's reputation may be sacrificed in a moment of ill considered action. The people who are prone to fall on their knees to do us honor when success is with us may be first to throw the stone of malice when failure settles its cloud upon our heads. The one absolutely unselfish friend that man can have in this selfish world, the one that never deserts him, the one that never proves ungrateful or treacherous, is his dog. A man's dog stands by him in prosperity and in poverty, in health and in sickness. He will sleep on the cold ground, where the wintry winds blow and the snow drives fiercely, if only he may be near his master's side. He will kiss the hand that has no food to offer. He will lick the wounds and sores that come in encounter with the roughness of the world. He guards the sleep of his pauper master as if he were a prince. When all other friends desert, he remains. When riches take wings and reputation falls to pieces, he is a constant in his love as the sun in his journey through the heavens. If fortune drives the master forth an outcast in the world, friendless and homeless, the faithful dog asks no higher privilege than that of accompanying him, to guard against danger, to fight against his enemies. And when the last scene of all comes, and death takes the master in its embrace, and his body is laid away in the cold ground, no matter if other friends have forsaken their way, there by the graveside will the noble dog be found, his head between his paws, his eyes sad, but open in alert watchfulness, faithful and true even in death."

Then Vest sat down. He had spoken in a low voice, without a gesture. He made no reference to the evidence or the merits of the case. When he finished, judge and jury were wiping their eyes. The jury filed out, but soon entered with a verdict in favor of the plaintiff for $500. He had sued for $200. It is even said that some of the jurors wanted to hang the defendant.

TALKING BIRDS. Singular Language of So Called Dumb Animals. Next to those heaven bestowed powers of intellect and reason that mark out the higher and nobler development of the human as apart from the brute creation comes the no less divine gift of speech, that priceless medium of intercourse and relation between man and man, the articulate expression of his thoughts, impulses and emotions. Is it not a little singular that, while the so called dumb animals have all some language, which according to method by which each species can hold converse with its kind, it is in the feathered world alone that we find any creatures capable of being taught to use the speech of man?

The monkey tribe, in spite of its grotesque resemblance to the human form, chatters in unintelligible gibberish, and the dog, man's nearest and most faithful companion—who does not know the wistful expression in the eyes of some of his favorite, the eager, upward look into his master's face, that seems to understand so fully all that is said, though denied the power to reply?

Certain birds, however, not only are capable of pronouncing articulate words and sentences, but it would really appear from many well authenticated instances as if they possess in some measure the reasoning faculty which enables them to apply their acquired art of speech with peculiar aptitude. The raven, the jackdaw, the magpie and the jay may all be trained to imitate sounds and to utter words and even sentences distinctly, but more familiar to most people are talking birds of the parrot tribe, which according to the credit of speech in far greater perfection than any other of their species. The voice of the parrot is also much more human in its tones; the raven is too hoarse; the jay and the magpie are too harsh. There are some modern authorities who regard the parrot when speaking that is sometimes absolutely uncanny in their weird resemblance to the "human voice divine." This superiority is due to the construction of its beak, its tongue and head. The parrot, too, has a wonderful memory and rarely forgets what it has once thoroughly learned.—London Lady.

Drinking Madeira.

Mr. Charles Fellers, our ablest authority on Madeira, thus describes the old Madeira drinker, taking a glass of wine:—"First a few drops are poured in the glass. Then the glass is warmed before an open fire until the wine is thoroughly heated, and then the drops are poured back into the decanter. Then the glass is half filled and slowly brought under the nose. He shuts both eyes and sniffs the aroma for a full minute. Then he opens one eye and holds the glass up to the light and with thumb and forefinger turns the glass round and round. Then, with a sigh, he tilts a few drops on the end of his tongue and rolls both eyes in a really alarming manner. If the wine pleases him, he finishes the glass, and if it does not he sets it down untroubled. This does not seem to be an affection, but the general method in which old Madeira is drunk by those who know, and I can assure you they are very few indeed."

FACTS ABOUT CONSUMPTION.

KEEP IN GOOD HEALTH.

A perfectly healthy man or woman is in very little danger of contracting that dread disease known as consumption or tuberculosis. Their powers of resistance are such that the germ is killed or thrown off, but everyone should take at least ordinary precautions and avoid becoming infected. The disease manifests itself in so many different ways that it is very difficult to combat: It is found in the throat, in the bones, in the bowels, in the joints of the limbs, in the form of hip disease and in many other forms, in addition to the most prevalent, namely consumption of the lungs. Too little emphasis has been put upon the importance of comfortable clothing in relation to good health. Women especially should be careful to wear clothes which will permit free and deep respiratory movements. They should be comfortable in every particular. Again ladies cannot be too often to abandon the ubiquitous fashion of trailing dresses, at least on the street. They should be brave and show the world that they care more for their own health and the welfare of others than for the dictates of fashion. When one considers how many millions of dangerous bacilli and micro-organisms are gathered up with the dust and brought into the house by this unhealthy mode of dress, further argument is hardly necessary to prove that the wearing of trains is absolutely dangerous. Why should ladies' dresses be made to do the scavenger's dirty work?

The question of ventilation should receive far more attention than is given it at present. Most buildings where people congregate in large numbers are not well ventilated. This is especially true of places of amusement. Workshops and schools should also receive more careful attention in this regard. It has been stated that the modern tendency to overheated private dwellings is very injurious to health. People should not breathe the suffocating air which comes from the ordinary hot-air furnace. There should always be a constant inflow of pure air into the living and sleeping rooms. If people would sleep with their windows open, it is probable that the death rate from consumption would be reduced at least 25 per cent.

As an illustration of the beneficial efforts from fresh air during sleeping hours, may be cited an instance of the principal of one of the leading colleges of Toronto who was suffering from overwork and general debility, who left his bed one sultry night last summer and stretched himself on a cot out on his verandah. He felt so much better in the morning that he decided to spend the next evening in the same place. He has continued the practice not only through the summer and fall months, but every night in spite of the winter's storm and bitter cold. The result is that now he enjoys robust health and is doing more work with greater ease than was ever possible during his previous history.

Those who are predisposed through weakened constitutions to disease should spend the greater portion of their time in the open air. As an occupation, farming and gardening cannot be recommended too highly. In fact, the trend of the population from the country to the city should be reversed and people would prolong their lives and increase their enjoyment if they would spend more time in the fields and woods studying Nature's secrets and learning the first principle of life, namely, how to keep in good health. Not only is the victim of rheumatism a constant sufferer, but he lives in continual dread that the disease will reach the heart, which means sudden and unexpected death. HEADS FOR FIGURES.

FEATS OF MENTAL ARITHMETIC THAT PUZZLED THE SCIENTISTS.

Two Untaught Phenomena, Ignorant on All Other Subjects, Who Could Solve Offhand Difficult Problems in Mathematics.

Jedediah Buxton, an English farm laborer, was an untaught mathematical genius. Although his grandfather was vicar and his father schoolmaster of the parish in which he was born, yet Jedediah, either from natural incapacity or from preoccupation with his arithmetical pursuits, never even acquired the rudiments of learning, either could not or would not so much as learn to write and was content to work as a farm laborer to the end of his days. But at a very early age he appears to have had an intuitive perception of the relative proportions of numbers, and to this subject he devoted the whole of his attention. His method was so much his own that he seems to have been quite unacquainted with the common rules. On one occasion, having been required to multiply 56 by 378 and having done it at a quickly 56 by 378 and the product thus obtained he then added the sum of the digits to the product, and he was asked to work the sum audibly, in order that his method might be ascertained. It then appeared, curiously enough, that he went to work in a very roundabout way.

First he multiplied the 56 by 5, which produced 2,280; this he again multiplied by 20 and found the product to be 45,600. Of course, he might much more readily have multiplied the 56 by 378, and having done it at a quickly 56 by 378 and the product thus obtained he then added the sum of the digits to the product, and he was asked to work the sum audibly, in order that his method might be ascertained. It then appeared, curiously enough, that he went to work in a very roundabout way.

It then appeared, curiously enough, that he went to work in a very roundabout way.

Another untaught mathematical genius, Zerach Colburn, whose abnormal development was an interesting problem, was the son of an American peasant. He was brought to London by his father in 1812, when 8 years old, when he was examined and his peculiar powers were given to Francis Baily and other skillful mathematicians. It was found that, although he was so ignorant of the ordinary rules of arithmetic that he could not perform on paper a simple addition, subtraction or division, yet he could mentally multiply any number less than 10 into itself successively nine times and give the results faster than the person appointed to record them could take them down. He multiplied 8 into itself 15 times, or, in technical terms, raised it to the sixteenth power, and the result, consisting of 15 digits, was found to be right in every figure. This was astonishing enough, but he was able to do things even more wonderful. When asked what number multiplied by itself gave 106,9329, he answered, before the original number could be written down, that it was 327. And, again, when asked what number multiplied twice into 1,000,000, he gave 336,125, or, to put it technically, what was the cube root of that array of figures, he replied with equal facility and promptness that it was 645. The mathematical calculation before they can assure themselves that 36,083 is what is called a prime number, or a number only divisible by itself and unity, a solution which this child was in some mysterious way able to see immediately the question was proposed to him.

Colburn, like Buxton, seems to have had a method of his own, but he constantly declared that he did not know how the answers came into his mind. "God put those things into my head," he said on being pressed for an explanation, "and I cannot put them into yours." Jedediah lived to the age of 65 with no more general knowledge or stock of ideas than a child of 10, and he kept his extraordinary calculating faculty to the end. But Zerach, the general culture of his mind improved, found his special power to fade away. Francis Baily was of opinion that Zerach Colburn's feats indicated the existence of certain properties of numbers which mathematicians had not yet discovered. But it is perhaps equally possible that they indicated capacities of the human mind which had hitherto been undreamed of.—London Globe.
