The immense gathering at the Western Fair yesterday afternoon richly enjoyed the treat afforded by the famous Commandery of Knights Templar from Detroit, assisted by the Windsor, Sarnia, Hamilton and London Preceptories. The parade from the Tecumseh House to the park was a sight that will be long remembered by the thousands of spectators gathered along the line of march to witness the beautiful sight,

The long line of marching men, with their handsome waving plumes, rich costumes and glittering swords, grand banners bearing emblems of the order, and spreading their colors to the breeze, the brilliant uniforms and highly burnished instruments of the bandsmen, presented a scene of rare beauty and brilliancy, as the knights moved along the avenues. The order of parade was as follows:

reputation of "The Old Homestead" is continental. It stands as the highest type of those rural plays, peculiar to the American stage. The name of Denman Thompson, who has made it famous, was one to conjure with, and it was the magnet that drew last night's audience. Denman himself wasnot in the caste, but it was felt that he would not allow his name to be associated with a company that was unworthy of it. And so it proved. As Joshua Whitcomb, John Barker is perhaps second only to Thompson. has his appearance, his voice and his mannerisms, and his portrayal of the good-hearted, unconventional old New England farmer was satisfying in the extreme. Of every one in the caste the same can be truthfully said. The play was embellished with special scenery, depicting the old homestead, its kitchen, Grace Church, a rain storm—allvery pretty stage effects, which work unstinted applause. "The Old Homestead" tells a very simple story, but it is its very simplicity which charms. The types of character are not the exaggerated ones usually presented on the stage; they are true to life, and it is because they are so near to na-ture that they go straight to the heart. It is a pure, elevating play, rich in humor and infinitely diverting. It will be repeated tonight, Saturday afternoon and Saturday evening. company includes two splendid quartets and some fine soloists.
