Canada's Trans-Atlantic Ship ping Independence.

The Buffalo Express is very much mistaken when it asserts that "Canclosed during about half the year by ice." Our contemporary is a live, wideawake journal, and it usually tells the truth about Canada, therefore we are astonished to find it so badly informed in regard to Canada's seaports as it dependent in the United States for free access to the sea during winter, Can ada possesses these ice-free ocean ports on both sides of her, and can establish additional ports equally free

John, N. B., and British the same port. When the governmentcontrolled Intercolonial Railway is ex- Erin. tended to Montreal, and thus enabled to bid for an increased share of the western traffic, we may expect a large increase in winter shipments, both at fast line of ocean steamships, which will ply between Great Britain and Canadian ports, summer and winter, will also undoubtedly largely increase our transatlantic trade. Thus commerce will be further augmented by the great and ever-increasing Anglo-Canadian trade, which the United States, by its restrictionist tariff, is doing so much to promote.

A nation like the United States, which says so plainly that it does not desire to do business with Canada, canno grumble if it finds all patriotic Canadians tooking for means to build up trade with those who desire to do business on fair terms, and with as few us, Canadians can look to the future in the history of our Northwest Terriwith confidence. It aptly adds that those who had predicted ruin and desolation when the Liberal party reached power in Canada are in a pitiful condition at the present time.
