It just took one hour and a quarter to get there by the most direct route I could take. Five minutes more to penetrate the grounds to where a superb vehicle stood, drawn by two of the finest horses I had seen in Washington for many a long day. As I remarking my way around this equipage I came upon a plot in a condition upheaval preparatory to new sodding and the planting of several choice shrubs. In the midst of the sand thus exposed a single head-stone rose. On his knees beside this simple monument I saw the figure of Uncle David, dressin his oddly contorted face the satisfaction of great prosperity, battling with the dissatisfaction of knowing that one he had so loved had not lived to share his elevation. He was rubbing away the mold from the name which. by his own confession, was the only one to which his memory clung in sympathy or endearment. At his feet lay an open basket, in which I detect-ed the remains of what must have been a rather sumptuous cold repast. To all appearance he had foregone none of his ancient customs; only those customs had taken on elegance with his rise in fortune. The carriage and the horses, and most of all, the imperturbable driver, seemed to awaksome awe in the boys. They were still in evidence, but they hung back sheepishly and eyed the basket of neglected food as if they hoped he would forget to take it away. Meanwhile the clattering of chains against the har-ness, the pawing of the horses and the low exclamations of the driver caused me the queerest feelings. Advancing quite unceremoniously upon the watcher by the grave, I remarked aloud:

The setting sun will soon release you, Mr. Moore. Are you going imnediately into town?"

He paused in his rubbing, which was being done with a very tender hand, and as if he really loved the name he was endeavoring to bring into plainer view. Scowling a little, he turned and met me point-blank with a look which had a good deal of inquiry in it. 'I am not usually interrupted here," he emphasized; "except by the boys," he added more mildly. "They sometimes approach too closely, but I am used to the imps and scarcely notice them. Ah! there are some of my old friends ing: Well, it is time they knew that a change has taken place in my fortunes. Hi, there! Hands up and catch this, and this, and this!" he shouted.

There were 3.554 persons killed and 45,977 injured during the year, as against 2,819 killed and 39,800 injured during the year preceding. This large increase is partially explained by the large increase in railroad traffic that has taken place during the last year, and the fact that there were more men at risk. The number of men em-ployed in train service June 30, 1903, was 12 per cent greater than on June 30, 1902. There is also a good explanation of the increase to be found in the fact that the interstate commerce commission has been persistent in its insistence on full reports of all accidents from all rallroads during the past year, and therefore acci-
