ST. ANDREWS, Scotland, June 20. To Charles Hoffner of the Philmot Country Cub, Philadelphia, today fell the honor of returning the low score over the old course in the first day's play in the qualifying round for the British open golf championship. Hoffner made the eighteen holes in 73 strokes, after he had missed putts on the last three holes. The record for the course is 71, and is held by George Duncan, the British open champion. The low score of the day over the Eden course went to Joseph H. Kirkwood, the Australian open champion, who also had a 73. The sixteen United States contestants—both amateurs and professionals—turned in good cards for the early round. After Hoffner, Bobby Jones of Atlanta, Ga., had the low score for the United States contingent, a 76, while following Jones came George McLean of the 77, and Jock Hutchinson of the Glenview Country Club, Chicago, with a similar score.
