

HOW MRS. BEAN MET THE CRISIS

Carried Safely Through Change of Life by Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

Nashville, Tenn.—"When I was going through the Change of Life I had a tumor as large as a child's head. The doctor said it was three years coming and gave me medicine for it until I was called away from the city for some time. Of course I could not go to him then, so my sister-in-law told me that she thought Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound would cure it. It helped both the Change of Life and the tumor and when I got home I did not need the doctor. I took the Pinkham remedies until the tumor was gone, the doctor said, and I have not felt it since. I tell every one how I was cured. If this letter will help others you are welcome to use it."

NOTE AND COMMENT

Over a million tons of sunken merchant ships lie in shallow water near the Irish coast, and it is proposed to raise them by the use of the submarine. The submarine as a weapon in warfare has proved itself. As a rescue ship it may prove itself also.

Sidney Webb, the English economist, says that the British Ministry of Munitions "is now three times as great in its turnover as the largest single industrial enterprise in the world, not excluding the most extensive American trust."

The Bradford Witness says: "As lady auto drivers are getting numerous, we would like to warn them to be careful, as a lady at Croemore had her arm broken in cranking a car. Of course she was unmarried, and inexperienced in handling a crank."

Toronto News:—Canada, like other Allied countries, is cursed with faint-hearted folk who shiver at the notion of compulsion. They forget that compulsion is constant in a Democracy. Taxes are collected under compulsion. Force is used to keep children at school. A man cannot even drive his motor as he desires. He cannot build a house in a city without complying with the by-laws. In the rural districts the Government may destroy property for the general benefit. Foul brood in an apiary is not permitted. Our whole life is hedged about with restrictions. Compulsion of the individual for the benefit of the community is the soul of freedom. The empty cry that we have no right to conscript our citizens, even in the face of the most barbarous and savage of enemies, is the whimper of a child and could not come from an adult intellect.

A despatch from Washington, July 20th, says:—A decrease of 10 per cent. in the consumption of flour in England in June is the claim made by the national war savings committee as a result of the "eat less bread" campaign inaugurated to conserve food, according to a report received by Herbert Hoover. This saving, it is stated, is in excess of all expectations. The success of the educational campaign in England, it is stated, is shown by the fact that in March, the saving was but two per cent., and in April four per cent., as against 10 per cent. for June. The committee says that it expects an even greater increase in the future, and gives much of the credit to the intelligent co-operation of women in their homes.

Why I Attend Church

It is sweet on a summer's morning, when the air is aquiver with the love songs of the birds and fragrant with the odor of roses blown, to hear the music of the church-going bells, an invitation to the world-wearied to enter God's temple and find peace, because the instinct of worship is in the heart of man and the church is the temple of the living God.

I go to church because I find peace there, that peace which De Quincy described as a resting place from human labor, as if I stood at a distance and aloof from the uproar of life; as if the tumult and fever and strife were suspended; as if there brooded over me a dove-like and halycon calm.

I go to church because I love the music that I hear there, the mighty roll of the great organ, mingled with the marvelous symphonies of that divine stringed instrument, the human voice, untwisting all the chains that tie the hidden soul of harmony.

I go to church because I delight to hear the teachings of the preacher, whose soul is dedicated to God, whose field is as wide as God's universe, whose theme is the destiny of man and whose words are the oracles of fate. Marvellous is the spell of the preacher to whom God has given genius and consecration, and the power of illustration drawn from the old, sacred, immortal book, and from the miracles of nature, no less revealed in the crimson-tipped flower turned up by the plowshare of Robert Burns upon the soil of yore than in the long reaches of the star-girt skies.

I go to church because "the way is dark and I am far from home," and because the church is the polar star to light my pathway in the rayless night.

I go to church because the church ministers not only to the spiritual but also to the material needs of life and because it is there that the charities that soothe and heal and bless are scattered at the feet of men like flowers.

I go to church because in that atmosphere vice and crime wither and die.

I go to church because I hear the teachings of the philosophy of Jesus, the incomparable man; and if you say His teaching is philosophy and not religion, and that He was a man and not a god, then the philosophy of that man has redeemed the world from savagery and blessed mankind with Christian civilization, and, to my mind it is a thing worth while to hear.

I go to church because I find there consolation and hope; because I see there the dawn and not the sunset; and it is better for man, if the hope is baseless and the vision but an exclusive phantom, to cherish a dream so glorious and beautiful than to be weighted down and crushed with the quarried mountains of a world without hope and without God.

England's War Appearance

An American, writing on his impressions of England in war times, dispels the gloomy idea that is associated with much of the descriptions that are conveyed of the effect of the war upon the living conditions of the people. Referring to the historic eating house in the Strand, London—"Simpson's"—he humorously remarks that they "place the sugar on the table still." In some of Lyon's emporiums they serve two small lumps with every cup of tea or coffee.

"I didn't expect to see so many soldiers in England," was the exclamation of a newly arrived American. But even the beleaguered fortress must have its guards and its reserves. The theatre queues are largely made up of women or men well over the fighting age. Any audience will show a much more advanced age average than two years ago. The mobilization of the nation has brought this about: The fit are fighting or being trained.

The call for economy is over all. The open purse is a temptation. If certain things can be eschewed, then they must be.

I tried recently to find a spot in the hills of Old England where the war had not reached forth its remorseless arms. It was a Dove Cottage, the home of Wordsworth, the poet, at Grasmere. An old woman piloted me about this literary shrine. She had volumes of Wordsworth lore at her tongue's tip.

"When will the war end?" she asked. "You know, I have nine grandsons in the army."

And in Shakespeare's house at Stratford-on-Avon where posters enjoining economy and national service.

Widow Not Next of Kin

A widow is not next-of-kin. This point was settled by Chief Justice Mathers, of Winnipeg, in a case involving the interpretation of a will. The will was that of George Velle, a merchant of Winnipeg, who died some years ago. By his will he left among other legacies, $5,000 to Fred Richardson, resident in British Columbia. The terms of this legacy were that if the legatee predeceased the testator, the legacy was to go to the next-of-kin. Richardson died, leaving a widow without family, and the question under dispute by the courts was whether the widow was the next of kin and entitled to the legacy. The testator's father and brothers and a niece were also beneficiaries under the will. Justice Mathers held the widow not entitled to the legacy.

The first railway time table history records is that produced by a native of Manchester, Eng., one George Bradshaw, who died in 1853. It was indeed a "time table de luxe," for, altho it had but six pages and was bound in green with gilt lettering, it was a collection of the various notices issued by the railroad companies doing business in England.
