WATFORD PUBLIC SCHOOL DEBATE

On Friday, Nov. 30, 1923, between three o'clock and four o'clock the Senior room of the Watford Public School had a debate. This was the first that the pupils have had since September, but they hope to have others in the future.

The subject of the debate was "Resolved that Country Life is preferable to City Life". The Senior Class took the Affirmative and the Junior Class the Negative. The Affirmative was represented by Elizabeth Spalding and Frank McCrae. Gladys Janes and Ross Kersey were the debaters on the Negative.

Each debater was allowed ten minutes and the leader of the Affirmative, Frank McCrae, was allowed two minutes at the end to reply. Both sides brought in very good points but in the end the Affirmative won by two points. The points of the two sides were 32 and 30. The judge, Mr. Shrapnell, a former principal of the Watford Public School, gave the pupils some valuable hints in the art of debating, before he gave the decision and the pupils showed their appreciation by a hearty clap of the hands.

The following day the members of the class were required to write a composition on the debate and the above report, written by Cecil Hollingsworth, was considered the best.
