Cultivation of Indian Corn.

Indian Corn is the most important crop raised on this continent; yet sitting down to write about its cultivation, we are painfully reminded of our lamentable ignorance of its chemical requirements. We know, reminded of our lamentable ignorance of its chamical requirements. We know, thanks to European investigations, some-thing of the requirements of wheat, barley, beens, peas, turnips, &c., but no one knows anything isstepecting the special demands of Indian corn. To raise a crop of wheat, from 15 to 35 bushels per acre, we know the exact quantity of certain constituents of manure that will be required; but who can say the same of Indian corn? Who can tell us, if a soil without manure yields 30 bushels of shelled corn per acre, how 30 bushels of shelled corn per acre, how much ammonia, phosphoric acid, potash, &c., we must supply in manure to produce 90 bushels per acre? Everybody must ad-mit that such knowledge is desirable, yet we are not aware of a single experiment that has ever been made to ascertain the

By reference to another page it will be seen that the New York State Agricultural Society has taken up this matter, and offered premuums for experiments on Indian corn, which, if judiciously carried out, cannot fail to throw some light on this interesting and important subject. Indian corn is supposed to be indegenous to the new world; at all events it flourishes better here than in Europe. It grows on the poorest sands, on the most tenacious clays, on granite rocks and rich alluvial bottoms; in every clime and on every soil of this wast continent Indian corn springs up, as it were, spontaneously, without the care and attention of the planter. The ease with which it is produced is probably one of the principal reasons why we have neglected study its peculiar requirements. Experience, that great teacher in all the practical arts, has target used in all we know of the cultivation of Indian corn. It would appear to teach that corn does net need so compact and calcarcous a soil as the wheat plant demands. It delights in a mucky to produce good wheat. It is a gross feeder; we can easily make land too rich for wheat, but we have never yet seen any too hich for the production of Indian corn. Like all spring crops, corn requires an active soil. The atmosphere should have free access, and decomposition and disintegration should go on with great ra-pidity. Hence, fine tilth is essential. The particles of soil should be rendered as fine as possible by good ploughing, dragging, polling, cultivating, etc.; and after the plants are up, the hoe and cultivator can-not be used too much far the hencify of the tot be used too much for the benefit of the

Many of our best Western New York farmers are in the habit of plowing under a clover sod immediately before planting. By this time the clover has got a good with a call will infa most agreed by parts of condition. The grubs feast on this recently covered matter, and do not attack the corn until it is well started and growing so rap-idly as to receive little or no injury. idly as to receive little or no injury. Plant early—the earlier the better, if the weather is warm and the soil in good order More corn was injured last year from late ripening than all other causes combined. The principal mean of hastening the matu-rity of corn is to be sought in thorough underdraming. But we are well aware that the expenditure of $30 per acres in the un-derdraming is, with three-fourths of our readers, entirely out of the question. The next means to be resorted to, is to plant early varieties, and to avoid planting too thick. We saw many crops of corn injured last season from too thick planting. It will be said that last year was an exceptional season. True, but we are persuaded that be sand three but we are persuaded that season. True, but we are persuaded that corn very generally suffers from this cause. We would rather plant in hills four feet apart, than three, which is the common paratice in the Eastern States. Careless planting must be garded against Planting "bees" are an abomination. Planting "bees" are an abomination. Some of the planters bury the seed six in-ches deep, while others hardly cover it at all. The consequence is the corn comes up-that which comes up at all-very un-evenly. Some hills are almost ready for the first hoeing before others are out of the ground, and the bad field of corn not only lock bad but turns out had at husking looks bad, but turns out bad at husking time. The hills should be made as broa and as flat at the top as possible, and the seed be covered not more than two inches deep. It is better to have too many seed in the hill than too few, for if too thick the plants can be thinned out, but if too thin, none can be added. It is always in the end the most econo-mical to mark out the lot both ways before nd three to four plants in a hill, is the best planting, so as to insure straight rows in both directions. The cornfield not only looks better to the passer by but you can horse-hoe both ways, and much closer without risk of cutting up the hills. If plaster can be obtained for less than four dollars per ton, it will on most soils. pay to use it on corn. The best way to ap-ply it is to scatter a small table spoonful or each hill, shortly after the plants are through the soil. The beneficial effect is some-times astonishing. Unbleached ashes and one-third plaster, are scattered on the hill with good effect. It appears to be the general opinion that ashes can be more profiably used on Indian corn than any other crop. How far the opinion is well founded experiments alone can decide.

CHEAP COMPOST FOR CORN .- Having re ceived the credit for two years past of hav-ing as good pieces of corn as any in our irhood, and attributing our su mainly to the use of a single handful of cheap compost dropped in each hill before planting the corn, we give you a statement as to how we form it. Supposing a load to contain twenty-five bushels, we take two loads of muck man-ure from our hog-yard, one load of wood ashes, and three bushels of plaster of Paris. Work the parts thoroughly together with a hoe or shovel. Our corn ground having re-ceived a coating of manure before being lengthwise of the furrows, until the sunface is well pulverized. We mark one way for the hills with a shallow furrow of the plough, and then draw a chain the other way, which shows the place for the the other way, which shows the place for each hill. The compost gives the corn a good start, and the manure helps it out. We have also, for the two years, past, soaked our seed corn in a strong solution of tobacco water: and have not been troubled much witch worms. Let it remain in the solution from twelve to twenty-four hours. W. 4. E. Cowles, Canton Conn., in Country Gent.
