The final assault of the Japanese, in which they at last succeeded in taking essession, was marked by the mos sperate hand to hand encounter that has thus far characterized the war. The Japanese left, thruout the entire action until night, was exposed to an enfilading fire from the Russian infantry and a gunboat on Talienwan Bay and four nine-centimetre guns posted at Tafengchen. At a critical moment the ammunition of the artillery ran low and it was decided to cast the raining ammunition into one final desperate assault.

Fortunately, however, at the moment this decision was reached, the Japanese squadron in Kinchou Bay, which had ceased bombarding when the infantry had first moved forward, suddenly resumed the shelling of Nanshan hill.

At Critical Moment.

Then the artillery opened fire with the remaining ammunition, and the first division courageously assaulted the Russian centre, only to be beaten back. During this time the fourth regiment, artillery, had been pounding the Russian left. Suddenly the Japanese squadron began pouring shells into the Russian left, and its shells into the Russian left. Then it was that the issues of the day were determined at a moment when the outcome was fluttering be-tween success and defeat for Japan;

It was the fourth division of the Osaka men that stormed the Russian left. It had once been said that Osaka men were not brave. It will never be said again.

The first division of Tokio, which had been exposed all day to the Russians of Sangas, occupying the left, and which had been exposed all day to the Russians of Sangas and 10 machine guns, and 10 machine guns and 10 seized Kinchou Castle and the entire infantry force gradually moved forward. The gunners on the fortified heights were not slow in giving smart response to the Japanese attack, and soon a vigorous fire and counter-fire was in progress, to which the big guns of the Japanese squadron lent noisy chime. At 6 o'clock the atmosphere had cleared up sufficiently for the naval marksmanship to work effectively.

For three hours the shelling from bay and shore and the replying from hill was a signal for a forward movement of the troops below, and the attacking batteries changed their positions to secure better ranges. At 11 o'clock a zone varying from 300 to 5500 yards in width separated the Japanese and Russian lines, and the rest of the day was spent by assailing forces in crossing the fire-swept zone.

A Russian gunboat in Talienwan Bay opened fire on the Japanese left at 10 o'clock in the forenoon and continued firing for five hours.

lengchan found the range of the third division and kept shelling it until 7 o'clock in the evening. The artiliery with the third division valuely endeavored to reach these guns, but failed on account of the darkness.

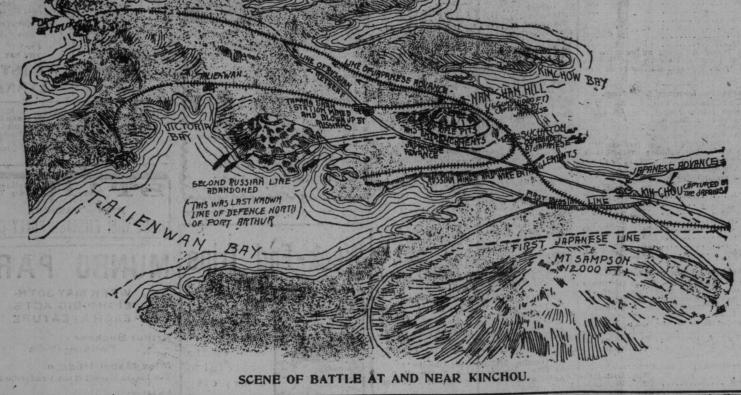

In the main attack, the Japanese artillery continued shelling Nanshin Hill, seeking to destroying entanglements and otherwise clear the way for the infantry, but every time the in-fire drove them back.

In the meantime the Russians had reinforced their right under cover of the two field batteries (previously withdrawn from Nanshan) with fresh infantry, whose fire enfiladed a considerable portion of the entire Japan-

Very critical at this time was the situation for Gen. Oku's forces, for at the wavering of the line under the relation for Gen. With every Japanese gun-directing its fire upon the Nanshan forts and trenches, the Japanese sinfantry sprang over the bodies of those who had sacrified their lives in previous fruitless charges. The entire line rushed forward toward the Russian ieft, where the fire of the Japanese squadron had proved most deadly, and which was the first to wasken. It was the that all day had been an invincible barrier to impetuous assaults.

The beaten forces, badly shattered, retreated toward Port Arthur, expioding the Tafengchan magazines as they receded. A detachment of Japanese infantry pursued the retreating Russians far into the night.
