FINANCIAL

New York, Nov. 22.—In view of the fact that the manipulative element has been unwilling to accept the offerings of stock that made their appearance when prices reached the high level of the recovery, having forced the shortage that hereafter brought on strong demonstration of wisdom of not climbing ahead, stocks is self evident. Purchase of a selective character on these declines during the weakness should be continued. Do not refuse fair returns on bulges.

The shippers' attack on railroad management before the interstate commerce commission, the low cotton figures, the start of the building strike here, a prediction by Hill in an interview in the Times that there is a poor year ahead, Mexican troubles—all are offered as excuses for the reaction. Vulnerable technique is perhaps the real reason. It is said the big banking interests have formed a syndicate to take from the insurance companies $100,000,000 of stocks that must be sold under the new law, and it is held by the American that such an act would not care to be taken without the belief that a big bull campaign could be engineered.

Press comment is pessimistic. Market literature is divided.

REDA SWEATER AROUSES ANGER OF BIG DURHAM AT WENHAM, MASS.

(Boston Herald.)

If you go golfing at Wenham don't wear a red sweater—if you do you may have to settle with T. Wilson Batchelder's big Durham bull.

Yesterday afternoon five players were "working out" on the nine-hole course at the Wenham Golf Club links. One of them wore a flaming red sweater. Their interest in the game was abruptly interrupted by a long loud bellow, and looking up they saw Mr. Bull coming skipping across the links, tail up, head down, and not 100 yards away.

Fortunately for the golfers a tree was near at hand. They dropped sticks and irons and ran for the tree, which none lost time in climbing. It is said two of the party never knew how to climb before. Thwarted in his game, Mr. Bull capered about the tree bellowing loudly, pawing up the ground and snuffing angrily in the direction of the crimson-clad golfer.

After an hour had passed the parties in the tree attracted the attention of other golfers, and Mr. Batchelder, who owns the bull, was notified. His son arrived, armed with a pitchfork, and led the animal away in submission. The bull had been at pasture in a neighboring field, and seeing the red jersey, jumped the fence.

The players were Carl Anderson of Boston, and Chester Ward, F. A. Squires, Chester Pepper and E. W. Shaw of Bentley.

E. L. Worcester, a member of the Philadelphia commission, Frank W. Carpenter, the secretary of the Philippines, Ignacio Vallarón, attorney general, and Charles H. Sleeper, director of the bureau of lands, are on their way to Washington from Manila, bearing with them all the records on the controversy over the friar lands in the Philippines. These records weigh about eight tons.

New togues and turbans generally have sharply uptilted brims.

GRAHAME-WHITE'S

WINNINGS IN THE AIR

$85,000 IN SIX MONTHS

He Charges $500 for Taking a Passenger up, if Only for Ten Seconds—Was Unsuccessful Auto Racer

Philadelphia, Nov. 22.—Claude Grahame-White, the English aviator, has accumulated something like $85,000 during the last six months through giving exhibitions with his biplane. He says he will accumulate a like amount within the next six months.

For his flights here Grahame-White will receive about $15,000. In his recent flights at Bowdoin, he cleared up $2,500; just before coming to America he received $2,500; the Brockton fair netted him another $2,500, while for the recent flights in New York he received about $30,000.

White's real revenue producers are his passenger carrying flights. For these he charges the passenger $50, no matter whether the flight lasts ten seconds or ten minutes. Before becoming an aviator White was a successful automobile racer.

The Balaklava Charge Survivors at Their Annual Dinner

Thirteen survivors of the famous Balaklava charge dined at the Holborn Restaurant in London lately as guests of the fund which has been raised for some years past by T. H. Roberts, the Earl of Cardigan, a kinsman of the famous officer who led the charge, cleared up during the evening the following telegram, dated "Buckingham Palace 7:20 p. m." was read:

"The King and Queen warmly thank the survivors of the Balaklava Light Brigade charge for their kind message, and trust that those who are celebrating that event of any kind will enjoy a happy anniversary."

It was pathetic in a way, but pleasantly pathetic to watch these old men arrive. Some came by omnibus; some, more robust than the others, had journeyed by train from the country; one arrived in a taxicab, and another was wheeled in a bath chair. One, again, had a nurse, and another limped into the room on the arm of two friends. All were smiling as they greeted each other as old friends and discussed their battles over again. There was one exception. He was an old man, a very old man; his name is Spring, and he once served in the 11th (Prince Albert's Own) Hussars. He sat alone, a melancholy figure in spite of the brave display of medals on his well-worn black coat. "Thinking of old times, Mr. Spring?" he was asked. "No," answered the old man, "not of old times but of the future. At my time of life it is perhaps just as well that I should."

Later on Mr. Spring, with some outward show of tolerance accepted a cigar from Lord Cardigan's case.

Another old hero assured our representative that his right leg was the best leg on any man in England, but for the fact that it was paralyzed. If it were not for that, he explained, he would be able to walk as well as any one. A third was rather doubtful about the others present. "They come up to me," he remarked, "as if they were old friends, whereas I can't remember having seen them before. The fact of it is that they are doing."

Still, this was not the case with some of the veterans present. For instance, there was Alderman J. A. Kilvert, of Wednesbury, who retired as sergeant-major. He is still hale and hearty and a busy worker in the cause of education and municipal improvement in the "Black Country." He with six others is not dependent on the fund as a matter of fact, but he is a subscriber to it—and he, in spite of his three score years and twenty, talked of the days when he was a young man.

There are others and some of them, Herbert of the 4th (Queen's Own) Light Dragoons; W. H. Pennington, 11th Hussars; J. Ford, 4th Dragoons; and J. Mustard, 17th (Duke of Cambridge's Own) Lancers, made admirable, if short speeches. Lord Cardigan said that the maintenance of these old men, "all that is left of them—left of six hundred," should be un-
