"Sho! Taint better'n city boarding-house cooking, is it, Net?" saked her father with a chuckle.

"Well, I guess," cried Jeannette.

"I suppose that is the way young ladies talk where you came from!" scornfully said Brother Fred, who was somewhat critical of the conduct and speech of girls. Jeannette was too busy with her dinner to reply.

"Well, I know something how you feel, Net." said Mr. Goodwin, as he spread another slice of bread and helped himself to a second dish of strawberries. 'I know how 'twas when I went to Boston for three weeks last Winter. Of course everthing was real nice at your

"I know how 'twas when I went to Boston for three weeks last Winter. Of course everthing was real nice at your Uncle Will's but land! T'wa'nt like mother's cooking. And the first night I came back mother took away all the johnny cake before I had near enough."

A pleased expression flashed across Mrs. Goodwin's worn face. She was a little woman, slender and with bent shoulders. The expression of determination and nervous force in her eyes and mouth told plainly why it was that she was habitually able to do more than seemed possible from her frail bodily appearance.

"Yes." ruminatingly went on Mr. Goodwin, "we're all glad to get home again—except Fred."

"This's what I'm afraid of," said Mr. Goodwin.

Jeannette was divided between hope and fear. A school friend had invited her to spend a week at her father's cottage on the shore. She had no money to spend even for her fare now, having given it all to her mother. She was a little woman, slender and with bent shoulders. The expression of determination and nervous force in her eyes and mouth told plainly why it was that she was hubitually able to do more than seemed possible from her frail bodily appearance.

"Net's a biggoose to throw her money away like that!" said Fred with another sniff. "Might's well burn itright up at once. Making mother do something that'll make her miserable!"
"You wait and see!" called back Jean-nette, going into the house.
That night at supper-table mother was almost ill-natured.
"Why, mother!" protested Mr. Good-

"Why, mother!" protested Mr. Goodwin. "Why, in the world's the matter? Kinder tuckered out, ain't you?"
"Well, yes, I am," said Mrs. Goodwin. "Netty is so exapperating! Here she's been and bought tickets to Block faland and return, and engaged a room for a week at the house where the Packards are, and now she's changed her mind and won't go. She says I've got to go!"

wheel exclaimed Father Goodwin, looking at Jeannette in evident admiration of her plan of proceedings. Jeanette shook her head warningly at her father, for fear he would say too much, and amaging a process of the shook her head warningly at her father, for fear he would say too much, and remarked, quietly:

"Yes, I bought the tickets a month

All of which was quite true.

"I should think a girl who had to work so hard for her money as you do," said her mother, severely, "would think twice, and know what she wanted to do, before she spent such a large sum of money as that."

"I'll try to next time," said Jeannette, meekly, "Well, go right along, mother," said father. "It'll do you good."

"The try to next time," said Jeannette, meekly.

"Well, goright along, mother," said father. "It'll do you good."

"Good!" was the impatient rejoinder. "Yes, it must do me lots of good to go where I don't want to! If I should' go I'd be miserable the whole time, thinking of all the more I'd got to do when I got back. I'm going to try and sell the tickets before the fifth of August, if I can. That's the date the room's engaged for. If I can't sell the tickets, I guess they won't care if we give up the stoom. There'll be plenty more to want it at this time."

Jeannette smiled. The tickets were in here own hands yet. Even if her mother should chance to find some one in this sleepy old town who would care to buy them, she couldn't very well dispose of them when Jeannette held them. The fourth of August came. By dint of persistence, seconded by father's advice that it might be a "downright good thing for mother to go," Jeannette had actually induced her mother to go to Block island.

The early morning of the fourth found Mrs. Goodwin's valise packed and Tou couldn't hire me to put that thing on!" she exclaimed.

"Well, I'm going to pack if, just the same," said Jeannette. "You have never been to the seaside, mother, and when you're there, you'll feel like doing as others do. And you know you're going to board right in the same place with Mrs. Packard and Louisa, and they're famous swimmers."

Mrs. Goodwin groaned. "Twon't do say good," she declared, resolutely. "I won't wear it!"

The middle of summer is a bad time for a farmer's wife to go visiting, especially when she does all her own work and that of two hired men besides. But Jeannette started bravely in. She was determined that when her mother returned, there should be no extra work for her to do.

"I thought you came home for a rest, I said Frail Trail."

thought you came home for a rest, 'said Fred. "Getting a fine one, Oh," said Jeannette, hopefully, "I may go to Block Island myself when mother gots back."

"You mean if it's done mother good, and father pays you back? But I give you fast warning, that will never be."

The next day they received a letter from the absent one, written on the evening of her arrival—a despondent, homesick epistle. She had been seasick on the water; and while writing was suffering with sick headache.

"I expect to be down sick when I get back," the letter hopelessly ended.

"I expect she will," added father, gloomily. "It's always best to let well enough alone, Net."

After this a week passed by, during which she was not heard from, then came a postal card simply saying, "Will be home the 14th."

"Mother's been sick, or she wouldn't have stayed so long," said Fred, confidently.

That evening the matter was talked over quite frankly. When Mrs. Goodwin understood the little ruse Jeannette had carried out for her enjoyment, she was greatly touched.

"Why, Nettie!" she said, and the tears sprang into her eyes: "What a kind, thoughtful, little daughter 1 have."—The Companion.

It is also of the greatest value in the cure of all forms of failing health from whatever cause. It performs this by the great nervine tonic qualities which it possesses, and by its great curative powers upon the digestive organs, the stomach, the liver and the bowels. No remedy compares with this wonderfully valuable Nervine Tonic as a builder and strengthener of the life forces of the human body, and as a great renewer of a broken-down constitution. It is also of more real permanent value in the treatment and cure of diseases of the lungs than any consumption remedy ever used on this continent. It is a marvelous cure for nervousness of females of all ages. Ladies who are approaching the critical period known as change in life, should not fail to use this great Nervine Tonic, almost constantly, for the space of two or three years. It will carry them safely over the danger. This great strengthener and curative is of inestimable value to the aged and infirm, because its great energizing properties will give them a new hold on life. It will add ten or fifteen years to the lives of many of those who will use a half dozen bottles of the remedy each year.

NERVOUS DISEASES. As a cure for every class of Nervous Diseases, no remedy has been able to compare with the Nervine Tonic, which is very pleasant and harmless in all its effects upon the youngest child or the oldest and most delicate individual. Nine-tenths of all the ailments to which the human family is heir are dependent on nervous exhaustion and impaired diges-When there is an insufficient supply of nerve food in the blood, a general state of debility of the brain, spinal marrow, and nerves is the result. Starved nerves, like starved muscles, become strong when the right kind of food is supplied; and a thousand weaknesses and ailments disappear as the nerves recover. As the nervous system must supply all the power by which the vital forces of the body are carried on, it is the first to suffer for want of perfect nutrition. Ordinary food does not contain a sufficient quantity of the kind of nutriment necessary to repair the wear our present mode of living and labor imposes upon the nerves. For this reason it becomes necessary that a nerve food be supplied. This South American Nervine has been found by analysis to contain the essential elements out of which nerve tissue is formed. This accounts for its universal adaptability to the cure of all forms of nervous derangement.
