THE FARMER'S WIFE. LAVILLA E. ALLEN.

From out the rosy land of dreams She comes at early morning;
The dew upon the meadow gleams,
Fair as a bride's adorning.

roms from the waving pines, And fields of blooming clover; he noisy brook that sings and shines, With willows bending over;

The eastern sky grows all sfiame, As though, to one beholding. The gold and sapphire clouds that c Were heaven's gates unfolding.

But all this glory stands apart, Nor charms her with its beauty, For care sits heavy on her heart, Where falls the line of duty.

The cows await the milking time With soft and patient lowing; The sturdy farmer, in his prime, Must hasten to his mowing.

His wife must speed the morn's repeat, And work with nimble fingers, For farmers all, from first to last, Make hay while sunshine lingers.

And when the meal is o'er, the pails
Of foaming milk are waiting,
With fragrance caught from sunny vales,
To future joys relating. The cream lies thick, like clath of gold, Where shining pans are brimming, Their riches gathered fold on fold, All ready for the skimming.

Then, later, as in olden days,
With much of stir and flutter,
By weary hands the dasher plays,
And wins the golden butter,

And so the day goes on, and on, No time for rest or pleasure : "A woman's work is never done," Is true in fullast measur

And as the sun sinks in the west, And day grows into even, Weary and worn she goes to rest, And almost longs for heaven,

-From Good Housekeeping. A MORNING PETITION.

FRANCES H. PAGE. I sit in the early morning With the day's work just begun, And I wonder what will befall me, Before the set of the sun.

Will the day be as uneventful
With doing the same thing o'er,
As sewing again in a garment
A seam I have sewed before;

Or, covered with heavy shadows, So deep, and so dark and dense, That I tremble with great forebod As I wait in dread suspense.

O Father, thou alone knowest, The days are all in thine hand; And the sunshine and the shadows, They are all at thy command.

But I cannot ask for pleasure, And I cannot ask for fame— And wealth, sometimes a blessin And wealth, sometimes a blessing Might prove e'en my greatest bane,

And I cannot ask for serrow,
Though a blessing in disguise,
So I know not what to ask for,
Because I am far from wise. Choose for me, then, my Father,
Thy blessing for me this day;
And grant me this one petition—
Remain thou with me alway.
—From the Saturday Traveller.
Boston Highlands, June 16.

A FRAGMENT. What if, while I sit here alone, A veice I have not heard for years Should greet me in the low sweet tone That once was music to my ears;
And I should start from Memory's sway,
And, turning, find you sitting there
Unchanged as though 'twere yesterday
Your feet went tripping down the stair.

Or if, upon some summer day,
'Mid song of birds and hum of bees,
I should go dewn the woodland way
To our old tryst beneath the trees;
And, starting back in glad surprise,
I should behold you waiting there,
The old light shining in your eyes—
The sunlight tangled in your hair,

In vain—I shall not see the glow
Of wine-brown eyes or catch the smile
Of ruby lips; but yet I know
That you are near me all the while.
For I so loved you in that range
Of sunny years that my poor heart
Would bleed afresh and count it atrange
To think God held us far apart.

And so, when evening shadows creep,
And night falls softly o'er the lea,
You touch my eyelids and I sleep,
And, sleeping, dream of Heaven and thee.
And when some summer morn shall break
That finds me chilled by Death's cold dew,
You need but hiss me, I shall wake,
And, waking, be in Heaven with you.

THESE LITTLE ONES.

MARY BOWLES, God's husbandry is filling all the land,
The grace of laden vine and waving corn.
Makes glad the workers who have nobly borne
The burden of the day at his command,
These have their steady toll, but some must

On battle fields, by strife of ages worn,

Lord, for great tasks I have not strength of hand;
For warrior deeds my weapons are not meet;
O let me labor till the sunset glow,
Far from the crowded vineyard and the strife,
Among the little children, pure and sweet,
The daisies of humanity that grow
Upon the heavenward slopes of life!

DISCARDED.

EUGENE CLAY FERGUSON. The rose last night in the garden grew, Woodd by the winds, caressed by the dew. In perfect content its hours were spent, Till on its beauty her eyes were bent.

Lies in anguish and writhes in pain, Nevermore to arise again. She plucked the flower with a hand so white, To wear in her hair at the ball tonight; And who could tell which was the most fair, The rose in her cheek or the rose in her hair? But faded at last, and its beauty o'er, She cast it away, with a smile, on the floor; And there at her feet its fragrance past, It lay forgotten by her at last. Many a heart has received like this rose, Wild disquiet for sweet repose;

Wild disquiet for constant trust, To be thrown at last like this flower

And I said, perhaps she may some day, Weary of me and cast me away— Weary of me at the drama's close,
And I shall go the way of the rose,
