MEN SPURRED TO AMBITION BY SCOLDING

Dictionary ascribes the attributes of "scold," "shrew," "termagant" and "vixen" to women. Men, however, compiled dictionaries, and Justice is personified by a woman not a man. Indeed, so perfectly is the quality of justice developed in woman that she is represented as being able to administer it even blindfolded.

Those who give women credit for being scolds, shrews, termagants and vixens, are not only wrong, but they are also wrong in the exercise of their wits' talents for scolding.

WOMEN OF COURAGE

Under the influence of empanate and unbridled feminine tongue some of the wisest sages, greatest rulers, scientists, artists and leaders of the world have even known have developed, and shall the beautiful image refuse to give due credit to the instrument which shaped it.

Who may guess how much of the tempering of that fine metal which went into the makeup of George Washington was occasioned by the ability of Dame Mary and Lady Martha to speak their minds for the diatribes of the scold, the shrew and the termagant are like blows upon the head, to temper it to greater endurance; to bring out in it new and wonderful qualities and to give it a new and more useful shape.

JOB'S WIFE

Ducking as a punishment for scolds was instituted by Noah, and not by her English or New England grandfathers. Chaucer tells us that Mrs. Chaucer was a veritable termagant. History does not relate just how she was scolded into a submissive creature, but how she used Noah proved to be to the human race.

How many who dwell upon the same much solaced and then cast them away. Compare what the old duke accomplished with the record of the present duke and you may learn the value of a shrewish wife.

At one time England kindly permitted men to sell their wives for as much as they pleased. It was a time when courageous hearts to be found willing to attempt the tampering of a scold.

There was also in use a "scold's bridle," made of metal bands, which held the tongue so that it could not move. Strange to say, the name of a man with foolishness enough to apply this device has never been published.

The East of Shrewsbury, who was living apart from his wife, received in 1650 a letter from the Bishop of Lich. The letter was to the effect that he was "a man ever obliged to be at war" and was his own to drive his wife's voice which was the thrasher of his own.

A COMMON JEST
The East of Shrewsbury, who was living apart from his wife, received in 1650 a letter from the Bishop of Lich. The letter was to the effect that he was "a man ever obliged to be at war" and was his own to drive his wife's voice which was the thrasher of his own.

But some will say, in your lordship's behalf, that the countess is a sharp and bitter shrew, and therefore she is not to be taken into consideration. I have heard her say so, but I have never heard her say so before. I have heard her say so, but I have never heard her say so before.

Notwithstanding the histories of men who have possessed shrewish wives, it must be pointed out that "The Anatomy of Melancholy" was written by a bachelor. The man with a shrewish wife seldom gets leisure enough to become melancholy.

Scarcely a man capable of ever delivering a lecture, but has his name printed upon the back of a book, and some have lectured so well that their names are graven even upon the public mind, and to them the public hand has raised up monuments in marble and in bronze in token of appreciation.

But who ever saw a monument erected to that vast multitude of lecturers whose eloquence may have done more to shape the destinies of the world than all the thunders of the Roman Forum, the Athenian Academy, the Hague and Carnegie Hall rolled into one colossal symphony of sound—who ever witnessed the unveiling of a statue to the Curtian Lecturer?

And yet can any unprejudiced man point out a class of lecturers whose words have produced more powerful effects, more visible results or more lasting impressions?

HER ELOQUENCE
True, men do not hasten to engage front seats to hear these lecturers, but it cannot be said that they "felt like thirty cents" after listening to one.

Most lecturers of public prominence are philosophers as well—or aim to be. Hegel gave the intellectual minds of Germany a twist in eighteen volumes of philosophical lectures. In which the only thing clearly demonstrated to many people was that he didn't know what he was talking about.

A certain lecturer can prove in eighteen words that she thoroughly understands her thesis and, incidentally, her audience, and no counter philosophy has been known to contradict the current of her thoughts—and their expression—until she has completely elucidated her theme. Whether her eloquence be brief or far otherwise, her remarks are always to the point, and are delivered like grape-shot, with a view to hitting not only the visible target, but as many invisible ones as might happen to be around and whose presence is merely suspected.

OFFICERS ON SPREE ON CHURCH TOWER'S STOP

Captain and Two Lieutenants of German Army in a Drunken Escapade

Recent the Sacred Building Being Profaned by Unseemingly Bacchanalian Revels

DRESDEN, July 14.—Zittau, a Saxon town of over 10,000 inhabitants, has provided Thomas Hardy with material for a story entitled "Three on a Tower," which might perhaps be incorporated in "Life's Little Ironies." The three were a captain and two lieutenants of the infantry regiment which forms the garrison of the town. They had been sitting for some time in a restaurant sipping stout, the German imitation of champagne, which should not unwarily be taken as a substitute for the original article, when one of the party was seized by the original and lofty idea of continuing their position on the summit of the tower of the neighboring church of St. John.

The proposal was hailed with acclamation, and the three officers seized the bottle and the glasses and ordering the waiter to follow them with additional supplies hastened across the street and up the steep staircase which leads to the summit of the tower. Scarcely had they emerged into daylight before their behavior attracted the attention of passersby, and a rapidly increasing crowd began to assemble in the street beneath.

BIG CROWD ATTRACTED

Presently one of the officers took off his coat and attempted to climb over the safety rail which surrounds the summit of the tower, apparently with the object of helping himself down. His companions seized hold of him and a vigorous struggle ensued. The news of the most diverting nature was being given at the top of the church now round the town like wildfire and the inhabitants poured to the scene by hundreds and thousands.

Soon there was a shout, and a sudden movement among the crowd, as an object was seen to come flying over the parapet of the present duke and you may learn the value of a shrewish wife.

At one time England kindly permitted men to sell their wives for as much as they pleased. It was a time when courageous hearts to be found willing to attempt the tampering of a scold.

There was also in use a "scold's bridle," made of metal bands, which held the tongue so that it could not move. Strange to say, the name of a man with foolishness enough to apply this device has never been published.

TRIFLING WITH LOVERS BRINGS WOMAN DEATH

Gained Affection of Two Men, Neither of Whom Knew the Other as Rival.

PARIS, July 14.—Lucie Pantin, a washerwoman, aged 19, died with her life for trifling with the affections of two young men.

Leon Charret and Alfred Millet, who had been friends from childhood, met in the street a few days ago after having lost sight of each other for some time. They had both the same story to tell, namely, that they were about to be married. Finally they parted after arranging a meeting between their respective fiancées.

Yesterday, as Charret was walking to his sweetheart's home to keep the appointment, he met her walking arm in arm with Millet. He was too surprised to speak, but Millet joyfully introduced his companion as his future wife.

The girl thereupon explained that she had only been amusing herself and would really marry neither of them. Charret, white with rage, drew a revolver and fired at the girl. The girl was killed on the spot and Millet had his shoulder fractured. The murderer was arrested.
