School seeking Dean of Students

By LYNN REICKER
Brunswickan Staff

The university has set up a Dean of Students search committee, chairman of which is Academic, Robert Burrige. Dr. Burrige explained some of the responsibilities of the Dean of Students, what qualifications such a person should have, and the progress and procedure of the committee.

The Dean of Students holds a very "challenging position." He is the student ombudsman and provides a strong liaison between University Administration, Faculty, and Students. He has a very important administrative role, overseeing such areas as counselling services, health services, residences, the SRC, orientation programs, foreign student programs, and many more. In summation, the five basic functions he must be concerned with are welfare, control, activity, teaching, and communication. All his duties are in some sense student-related.

The new dean must have great concern for the students' concerns and their welfare, and must ensure that student-oriented programs, operated by the university, are well organized. In Dr. Burrige's words, he must be a "sympathetic person with good judgement, and quite a bit of wisdom." He must be respected as an administrator and be able to relate well to the professors, deans, and chairmen for he will need to seek their cooperation and support.

At the time of this interview, the committee had held only one meeting, a second to be held Thursday morning, November 27, 1980. At the first meeting, the committee studied the terms of reference, duties, et cetera. "In these search committees where there is an incumbent, the rules are pretty uniform," following university regulations. The first stage in this process is to determine the opinion of the constituency. To do this, a letter was placed in the Brunswickan a
