GREAT EXPECTATIONS

Most first year students will be so overwhelmed by the sheer blitz of activities over the next two weeks that they may not have the time to consider the tremendously impressive programme that has been lined up for them. Few would realize that they are being treated to what is arguably the best orientation programme in North American universities, and fewer would believe that the Orientation Committee of UNB has the awards to confirm this assertion. What is unquestionable is that much time and thought was put into this year's Orientation Programme and the variety of activities combine the sheer unadulterated fun of concerts and dances, with the responsible and well meaning gesture of kindness in the Shinerama exercises.

commendable and the hope is that the 150 upperclassmen will succeed in "introducing freshmen students to all aspects of life at the University of New Brunswick, and to pave the way for an academically and socially successful career at UNB".

The co-ordination of the many activities should prove taxing for the Orientation Committee, this added to the pressure placed on each new committee to ensure a successful and balanced programme for first year students, should stretch the skills of all who are involved. Despite this, the true beneficiaries will be the new students, who certainly have enough promised to them to make their first few days, at least, filled with the sheer energy of anticipation.

The aims of Orientation '89 are
