KNOW YOUR AIRCRAFT

MOSQUITO BOMBER

The Mosquito is a shoulder high wing twin engine monoplane with single fin and rudder and retractable undercarriage. The tail wheel is also retractable.

The aircraft is classed as a long range multi-seater fighter bomber reconnaissance and has proven itself on a large variety of jobs. The first notable exploit of this plane was the daylight bombing of the Gestapo headquarters in Oslo.

The plane was thoroughly tested and proved before being put into large scale production. It is powered by two Rolls Royce Merlin engines of 1030 H.P. each which give the plane a top speed well in excess of 400 miles per hour.

The armament is formidable. It carries 4-20M Haspano cannons and 4 rifle calibre Browning machine guns as well as an adequate supply of bombs.

The recognition features of the plane are as follows:

The underslung in line engines projecting ahead as far as the nose.

The wing section almost straight, leading edge and moderate straight taper on trailing edge and the small rounded wing tips.

The tail plane with curved taper more pronounced on leading edge and small rounded tips. The single fin and rudder almost exactly resembles half the tail plane.
