

on the rest of creation—Moral truths and principles necessary to man, and exist independent of him, p. 29-74.

CHAPTER III.

The reality of governing principles, and of their source from a law-giver, witnessed to by the facts of man's nature, his yearnings, and his wants—The importance and necessity of revelation, and manifestation—The gift of reclamation to man is to enable him to fulfil his end—The means through and by which he may do this, and how he may accomplish his end, pointed out—His will, how set free—His responsibility—How a gracious God deals with him, and what is required of him to obtain his Maker's love, p. 75-115.

CHAPTER IV.

Creation a divine work, its continued existence proved to be dependent on a divine worker—Proofs of repeated acts of divine interference in the progress of the world—Evidence of "thought" manifested in creation, proving the existence of a thinking mind—Views of M. Agassiz on Mr. Darwin's theories—Mr. Powell's views against miraculous interference refuted, by facts of nature—The nature and object of Christ's miracles—God's pleasure to manifest himself through means, p. 116-199.

CHAPTER V.

Man's inability to serve or worship God by his own un-