

Those Fine Currants

Really, we do not know just how to describe them. If you could come in and see them and TASTE them. There's the important thing. It is flavor in currants that make the value. These are perfect blue-black fruit, thoroughly cleaned—no stems, no dirt to bother you. And the flavor! When we tell you that we have never sold as fine fruit at so cheap a price, you will have an idea of what we mean.

Come in and try them.

3 Pounds for 25c

FINEST SELECTED RAISINS, 5 lbs. 25c
COOKING PIGS, 5c a pound.
FINE PRUNES, 3 lbs. for 25c.

H. Malcolmson

Now

One month and you will need some little gift or gifts for friends and the following may suit at these special prices—

Pearl handle knives and forks at per dozen $8.00
Ladies silver and gunmetal watches at $2.50.

Birthday and gift rings, in solid gold, with all the different stones, at $1.50.

Genuine ebony Brushes at $1.

Inspection invited.

E. J. MacIntyre,

Overcoat Elegance

Need not be overcoat extravagance, for no matter at what price you buy a coat of us, it will be made in the latest style. Every detail is entrusted to competent and careful workmen. The way a coat is put together has just as much to do with the elegance of its appearance as the fabric of which it is composed.

That's why our Overcoats at wholesale price have a distinctive air about them that ordinary coats do not possess.

Call and inspect Our Goods . . .

SCOTT & CO.,

Chatham's Leading Clothiers.

Minard's Liniment Cures Burns, etc.

THE DISTRICT

WALLACEBURG

Nov. 29.—Mr. J. Reynolds and Master Cecil, spent Thanksgiving at Sarnia.

J. Benedict, of Chatham, is spending a few days at his home here.

F. Shambles, of Chatham, spent Thanksgiving in our town.

The Ridgeway Dramatic Club played in the opera house Wednesday and Thursday evening.

Mrs. Gillingham spent Thanksgiving with friends at Marine City.

Miss Selah Taylor has returned after a visit to Harwich.

Mr. and Mrs. W. C. See returned this week from Fort William.

Carrier boys are not authorized to collect subscriptions. Our collector calls in each town once a month; if a subscriber wishes to pay his account, before the collector calls he must remit direct to The Planet Office, Chatham, as we will not be responsible for money paid to carriers.

BLENHEIM

Nov. 29.—Wm. Riden, manager of the Erie Iron Works, St. Thomas, was in town on Wednesday looking up some business for that firm.

Mrs. John Titus leaves to-day for a few weeks' visit with her brother in Michigan.

Miss Dora Carmichael leaves tomorrow for Wallaceburg, where she will be the guest of her sister, Mrs. L. Appleford, until the Christmas holidays.

Mr. and Mrs. W. J. Agar spent the Thanksgiving in Chatham.

Mrs. David Eagle and daughter spent Thanksgiving with friends in Windsor.

Miss Lulu Arnold, who has been visiting for some time with her sister, Mrs. (Dr.) G. J. Gibb, left Wednesday for her home in Toronto.

Geo. Higley has secured a good situation in Cleveland.

Miss Holland, of Wallaceburg, spent yesterday in town the guest of Miss Dora Labadie.

Carrier boys are not authorized to collect subscriptions. Our collector calls in each town once a month; if a subscriber wishes to pay his account, before the collector calls he must remit direct to The Planet Office, Chatham, as we will not be responsible for money paid to carriers.

NORTH DUXTON

The Baptist people had a successful bazaar last Friday and got their shed, 82 feet by 22 feet, raised, sided and shingled before Thanksgiving.

Mrs. Parker, of Detroit, is expected here in a few days to open a school where she will teach music and various kinds of fancy needle work. This is much needed, and we hope that the young people will take advantage of the opportunity.

A. Robbins received the sad news on Wednesday that his son Reg, was lying dangerously ill with typhoid fever in Cleveland. He left at once for to see him.

Mrs. Jane Rhue, who has been ill so long, is no better.

Miss Gertrude Holland is teaching music. She is a lady of wide experience in this work.

DON'T

Don't think because you have taken many remedies in vain that your case is incurable.

You have not taken Hood's Sarsaparilla.

It has cured many seemingly hopeless cases of scrofula, catarrh, rheumatism, kidney complaint, dyspepsia and general debility—many cases that may have been worse than yours.

What this great medicine has done for others it can do for you.

HIGHGATE

Dr. Meld, of Bothwell, conducted a missionary service in the Methodist church on Sunday last. On Monday evening the ladies served a splendid dinner in the basement. The program consisted of singing by Mrs. Cooper, of Chatham, the Male Quartette and church choir; also speeches by Rev. A. E. Thompson, of Rodney, and Dr. Meld. Mrs. Cooper is a favorite and her singing was well received.

Harry Gosnell has returned from Carleton Place.

Thanksgiving services will be conducted in the Methodist church on Thursday evening.

King Buffalo is a high class cigar, that is sold for five cents at all leading cigar stores and by druggists.

For storm doors and storm windows on short notice go to Blonde Bros.

When you ask for a five cent cigar you want the best. Try our "King Buffalo" and you will smoke another.

DR. RUSSELL

DENTIST.

Cor. King & 5th Sts., over Merch Bank PHONE. Chatham.
Evening Apointments Made

NERVOUS DYSPEPSIA

A CURE FOR IT.

Not a Patent—Sure All, nor a Modern Miracle—But simply a Rational Cure for Dyspepsia.

In these days of humbuggery and deception the manufacturers of patent medicines, as a rule, seem to think their remedies will not sell unless they claim that it will cure every disease under the sun. And they never think of leaving out dyspepsia and stomach troubles. They are sure to claim that their nostrum is absolutely certain to cure every dyspeptic and he need look no further.

In the face of these absurd claims it is refreshing to note that the proprietors of Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets have carefully refrained from making undue claims or false representations regarding the merits of this most excellent remedy for dyspepsia and stomach troubles. They may make but one claim for it and that is, that for indigestion and various stomach troubles Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets is a radical cure. They go no further than this, and any man or woman suffering from indigestion, chronic or nervous dyspepsia, who will give the remedy a trial will find that nothing is claimed for it, that the facts will not fully sustain.

It is a modern discovery, composed of harmless vegetable ingredients adapted to the weakest or most delicate stomach. It is a great success in curing stomach troubles is due to the fact that the medicinal properties are such that it will digest whatever wholesome food is taken into the stomach, no matter whether the stomach is in good working order or not. It rests the overworked organ and replenishes the body, the blood, the nerves, creating a healthy appetite, giving refreshing sleep and the blessing which always accompanies a good digestion and proper assimilation of food.

In using Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets no dieting is required. Simply eat plenty of wholesome foods and take these Tablets at each meal, thus assisting and resting the stomach which rapidly regains its proper digestive power, when the Tablets will be no longer required.

Nervous Dyspepsia is simply a condition in which some portion or portions of the nervous system, are not properly nourished. Good digestion invigorates the nervous system and every organ of the body.

All druggists will tell you Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets give universal satisfaction.

SECRET OF LONG LIFE

How Signor Crisp Lengthened His Day—His "m. le tas es."

When Signor Crisp, an old man of eighty-two, was astonishing the whole world by his extraordinary resistance to death, many reasons were put forth to account for the phenomenon, which, after all, according to his own testimony, is a very simple one. To great natural vigor of body was added a life of absolute sobriety and regularity. Whether this abstinence was natural to him is not known, but it is certain that through years of great poverty it became second nature.

While in Malta for some time he slept on straw and ate of bread and salad, while wine never passed his lips. To a newspaper friend during his days of exile in Piedmont, he said: "To live I must labor; give me work," and afterwards, "I long time thought myself lucky to have political articles to write at eight shillings each."

In later life he was an absolute enigma to his friend, Prince Bismarck, when he visited him at Friedrichsruhe, the capacity of the latter for beer and tobacco being well known. A man who never smoked at table, only just tasted one or two of the most simple dishes, and drank only a glass of simple wine, always mixed with water, and never took a glass of beer between meals, was a study worthy of some attention and much admiration. In his own house his cook had as much trouble to prepare simple dishes that he would eat as he would have had to concoct rich dishes for another person. Many days, during times of political stress, he hardly ate at all, but was always regular in his times of going to regular sleep. "Regularity and abstinence are the secret of life," he has been heard to say; and truly he seems to have proved it so.

While in Malta for some time he slept on straw and ate of bread and salad, while wine never passed his lips. To a newspaper friend during his days of exile in Piedmont, he said: "To live I must labor; give me work," and afterwards, "I long time thought myself lucky to have political articles to write at eight shillings each."

In later life he was an absolute enigma to his friend, Prince Bismarck, when he visited him at Friedrichsruhe, the capacity of the latter for beer and tobacco being well known. A man who never smoked at table, only just tasted one or two of the most simple dishes, and drank only a glass of simple wine, always mixed with water, and never took a glass of beer between meals, was a study worthy of some attention and much admiration. In his own house his cook had as much trouble to prepare simple dishes that he would eat as he would have had to concoct rich dishes for another person. Many days, during times of political stress, he hardly ate at all, but was always regular in his times of going to regular sleep. "Regularity and abstinence are the secret of life," he has been heard to say; and truly he seems to have proved it so.

While in Malta for some time he slept on straw and ate of bread and salad, while wine never passed his lips. To a newspaper friend during his days of exile in Piedmont, he said: "To live I must labor; give me work," and afterwards, "I long time thought myself lucky to have political articles to write at eight shillings each."

In later life he was an absolute enigma to his friend, Prince Bismarck, when he visited him at Friedrichsruhe, the capacity of the latter for beer and tobacco being well known. A man who never smoked at table, only just tasted one or two of the most simple dishes, and drank only a glass of simple wine, always mixed with water, and never took a glass of beer between meals, was a study worthy of some attention and much admiration. In his own house his cook had as much trouble to prepare simple dishes that he would eat as he would have had to concoct rich dishes for another person. Many days, during times of political stress, he hardly ate at all, but was always regular in his times of going to regular sleep. "Regularity and abstinence are the secret of life," he has been heard to say; and truly he seems to have proved it so.

While in Malta for some time he slept on straw and ate of bread and salad, while wine never passed his lips. To a newspaper friend during his days of exile in Piedmont, he said: "To live I must labor; give me work," and afterwards, "I long time thought myself lucky to have political articles to write at eight shillings each."

In later life he was an absolute enigma to his friend, Prince Bismarck, when he visited him at Friedrichsruhe, the capacity of the latter for beer and tobacco being well known. A man who never smoked at table, only just tasted one or two of the most simple dishes, and drank only a glass of simple wine, always mixed with water, and never took a glass of beer between meals, was a study worthy of some attention and much admiration. In his own house his cook had as much trouble to prepare simple dishes that he would eat as he would have had to concoct rich dishes for another person. Many days, during times of political stress, he hardly ate at all, but was always regular in his times of going to regular sleep. "Regularity and abstinence are the secret of life," he has been heard to say; and truly he seems to have proved it so.

While in Malta for some time he slept on straw and ate of bread and salad, while wine never passed his lips. To a newspaper friend during his days of exile in Piedmont, he said: "To live I must labor; give me work," and afterwards, "I long time thought myself lucky to have political articles to write at eight shillings each."

In later life he was an absolute enigma to his friend, Prince Bismarck, when he visited him at Friedrichsruhe, the capacity of the latter for beer and tobacco being well known. A man who never smoked at table, only just tasted one or two of the most simple dishes, and drank only a glass of simple wine, always mixed with water, and never took a glass of beer between meals, was a study worthy of some attention and much admiration. In his own house his cook had as much trouble to prepare simple dishes that he would eat as he would have had to concoct rich dishes for another person. Many days, during times of political stress, he hardly ate at all, but was always regular in his times of going to regular sleep. "Regularity and abstinence are the secret of life," he has been heard to say; and truly he seems to have proved it so.

While in Malta for some time he slept on straw and ate of bread and salad, while wine never passed his lips. To a newspaper friend during his days of exile in Piedmont, he said: "To live I must labor; give me work," and afterwards, "I long time thought myself lucky to have political articles to write at eight shillings each."

In later life he was an absolute enigma to his friend, Prince Bismarck, when he visited him at Friedrichsruhe, the capacity of the latter for beer and tobacco being well known. A man who never smoked at table, only just tasted one or two of the most simple dishes, and drank only a glass of simple wine, always mixed with water, and never took a glass of beer between meals, was a study worthy of some attention and much admiration. In his own house his cook had as much trouble to prepare simple dishes that he would eat as he would have had to concoct rich dishes for another person. Many days, during times of political stress, he hardly ate at all, but was always regular in his times of going to regular sleep. "Regularity and abstinence are the secret of life," he has been heard to say; and truly he seems to have proved it so.

While in Malta for some time he slept on straw and ate of bread and salad, while wine never passed his lips. To a newspaper friend during his days of exile in Piedmont, he said: "To live I must labor; give me work," and afterwards, "I long time thought myself lucky to have political articles to write at eight shillings each."

In later life he was an absolute enigma to his friend, Prince Bismarck, when he visited him at Friedrichsruhe, the capacity of the latter for beer and tobacco being well known. A man who never smoked at table, only just tasted one or two of the most simple dishes, and drank only a glass of simple wine, always mixed with water, and never took a glass of beer between meals, was a study worthy of some attention and much admiration. In his own house his cook had as much trouble to prepare simple dishes that he would eat as he would have had to concoct rich dishes for another person. Many days, during times of political stress, he hardly ate at all, but was always regular in his times of going to regular sleep. "Regularity and abstinence are the secret of life," he has been heard to say; and truly he seems to have proved it so.

While in Malta for some time he slept on straw and ate of bread and salad, while wine never passed his lips. To a newspaper friend during his days of exile in Piedmont, he said: "To live I must labor; give me work," and afterwards, "I long time thought myself lucky to have political articles to write at eight shillings each."

In later life he was an absolute enigma to his friend, Prince Bismarck, when he visited him at Friedrichsruhe, the capacity of the latter for beer and tobacco being well known. A man who never smoked at table, only just tasted one or two of the most simple dishes, and drank only a glass of simple wine, always mixed with water, and never took a glass of beer between meals, was a study worthy of some attention and much admiration. In his own house his cook had as much trouble to prepare simple dishes that he would eat as he would have had to concoct rich dishes for another person. Many days, during times of political stress, he hardly ate at all, but was always regular in his times of going to regular sleep. "Regularity and abstinence are the secret of life," he has been heard to say; and truly he seems to have proved it so.

While in Malta for some time he slept on straw and ate of bread and salad, while wine never passed his lips. To a newspaper friend during his days of exile in Piedmont, he said: "To live I must labor; give me work," and afterwards, "I long time thought myself lucky to have political articles to write at eight shillings each."

In later life he was an absolute enigma to his friend, Prince Bismarck, when he visited him at Friedrichsruhe, the capacity of the latter for beer and tobacco being well known. A man who never smoked at table, only just tasted one or two of the most simple dishes, and drank only a glass of simple wine, always mixed with water, and never took a glass of beer between meals, was a study worthy of some attention and much admiration. In his own house his cook had as much trouble to prepare simple dishes that he would eat as he would have had to concoct rich dishes for another person. Many days, during times of political stress, he hardly ate at all, but was always regular in his times of going to regular sleep. "Regularity and abstinence are the secret of life," he has been heard to say; and truly he seems to have proved it so.

While in Malta for some time he slept on straw and ate of bread and salad, while wine never passed his lips. To a newspaper friend during his days of exile in Piedmont, he said: "To live I must labor; give me work," and afterwards, "I long time thought myself lucky to have political articles to write at eight shillings each."

In later life he was an absolute enigma to his friend, Prince Bismarck, when he visited him at Friedrichsruhe, the capacity of the latter for beer and tobacco being well known. A man who never smoked at table, only just tasted one or two of the most simple dishes, and drank only a glass of simple wine, always mixed with water, and never took a glass of beer between meals, was a study worthy of some attention and much admiration. In his own house his cook had as much trouble to prepare simple dishes that he would eat as he would have had to concoct rich dishes for another person. Many days, during times of political stress, he hardly ate at all, but was always regular in his times of going to regular sleep. "Regularity and abstinence are the secret of life," he has been heard to say; and truly he seems to have proved it so.

While in Malta for some time he slept on straw and ate of bread and salad, while wine never passed his lips. To a newspaper friend during his days of exile in Piedmont, he said: "To live I must labor; give me work," and afterwards, "I long time thought myself lucky to have political articles to write at eight shillings each."

In later life he was an absolute enigma to his friend, Prince Bismarck, when he visited him at Friedrichsruhe, the capacity of the latter for beer and tobacco being well known. A man who never smoked at table, only just tasted one or two of the most simple dishes, and drank only a glass of simple wine, always mixed with water, and never took a glass of beer between meals, was a study worthy of some attention and much admiration. In his own house his cook had as much trouble to prepare simple dishes that he would eat as he would have had to concoct rich dishes for another person. Many days, during times of political stress, he hardly ate at all, but was always regular in his times of going to regular sleep. "Regularity and abstinence are the secret of life," he has been heard to say; and truly he seems to have proved it so.

While in Malta for some time he slept on straw and ate of bread and salad, while wine never passed his lips. To a newspaper friend during his days of exile in Piedmont, he said: "To live I must labor; give me work," and afterwards, "I long time thought myself lucky to have political articles to write at eight shillings each."

In later life he was an absolute enigma to his friend, Prince Bismarck, when he visited him at Friedrichsruhe, the capacity of the latter for beer and tobacco being well known. A man who never smoked at table, only just tasted one or two of the most simple dishes, and drank only a glass of simple wine, always mixed with water, and never took a glass of beer between meals, was a study worthy of some attention and much admiration. In his own house his cook had as much trouble to prepare simple dishes that he would eat as he would have had to concoct rich dishes for another person. Many days, during times of political stress, he hardly ate at all, but was always regular in his times of going to regular sleep. "Regularity and abstinence are the secret of life," he has been heard to say; and truly he seems to have proved it so.

While in Malta for some time he slept on straw and ate of bread and salad, while wine never passed his lips. To a newspaper friend during his days of exile in Piedmont, he said: "To live I must labor; give me work," and afterwards, "I long time thought myself lucky to have political articles to write at eight shillings each."

CANADIAN HUMOR.

Some Considerations That Account for His Death.

A great deal is taken for granted in making use of such titles, but it can be stated immediately that the expression does not make any claim for the existence of a school of Canadian humor. Rather, although it is a sad admission, a doubt may be expressed whether there is much humor of any kind to be found in Canadian publications. If it were not for the editorial writers on our newspapers, who are generally able to discover something worth a smile once a day, one would have to admit that there is a singular lack of sparkle in literary expression of any kind in Canada. We can be sincere and appreciative, very much in earnest about our duties and our surroundings, but the old lady who advocated the establishment of a chair of humor to improve the tone of the average theological college would have some reason for believing that the nature of Canada was in a serious way.

Outsiders, it is to be supposed, would account for this state of affairs in one of two ways, either by saying that Canadians cannot take anything but a serious view of themselves, or else that they have a dislike for humorous view of life when it is presented to them by others.

Leaving the first explanation for the present, one can say without any hesitation that the second supposition is most unfair. The Canadian is deeply attached to a joke, whether produced by himself or by someone else. The Canadian is a cosmopolitan in humor. He feels that he can understand the English, Scotch and Irish humorists. He is thoroughly in sympathy with the Americans when they are inspired by circumstances to compose that form of sublimated fiction which contains their best wit. He can enjoy life, although he may be convinced that there is a broader culture to be found in Punch, with its famous school of draughtsmen. Brought up as we are, and with a constant recollection that he is only one among a number of nationalities, the Canadian can recognize elevation of spirits in the German, and even in the Chinese, when it is presented to him. How then can it be supposed that Canadians are incapable of appreciating humor? What ever the explanation may be for the want of written examples of Canadian humor, it cannot be that they are not popular in Canada.

The question of production is another matter. There is an adherence to time-honored jests in sections of Canada that seems to justify the suspicion that there has not been a great plenty of alternatives. You can feel certain that a joke will never die, once it has taken a firm hold on the affections of the people; crops may rotate, but a jest is incapable of exhausting any soil it has once fastened on. It must not be supposed, however, that Canadians are incapable of either unconscious or spontaneous humor; as for example, the native of eastern Ontario, who invested in an "imposing marble slab" for his first wife's spouse, and divided it fractionally and horizontally for the two ladies who rashly followed her; or, as in the case of the man in western Ontario, who, after doing his best with a large, dry fish which had been baked for his dinner, to a condition that expelled every recollection of its native element, remarked with unconscious wisdom, that there must be a lot of eating on a whale.

One of the most singular things about the present dearth of humor in Canadian writing is the fact that earlier in our history this was not the case. Sam Slick, although he was an American, was a clockmaker in New Brunswick, and his Canadian chronicler felt that it was quite natural that he should be so. It did not worry Judge Haliburton that Frederick and St. John had not a world-wide reputation in 1840. He felt entirely capable of adding that attraction to a most charming part of the world, which he found of native character that could be treated humorously, and with the fuller, deeper note of truth which always accompanies genuine humor. "The author of 'The Clockmaker,' 'The Attache' and 'The Letter Bag' of the Great Western' would have been somewhat astonished if he had known how long he would have had to wait for a successor. In the meantime, extracts from some of his most famous passages have been included in Canadian school readers; and in this way a conviction has remained in the native consciousness that there once was a man of letters, who lived in the lower Provinces and wrote of politics and character from an entirely Canadian point of view. It may be because the shillalah element has so largely departed from public life that no imitator of Judge Haliburton's somewhat caustic and heavy wit now discusses our relations with the mother country and with the States. A wider knowledge of the politics of other countries introduces a feeling of procedure and criticism into one's own. To hear from Mark Twain how the Magyars and Czechs roll about on the Parliamentary floor in Austria suggests the reflection of how much more cultured and respectable it is to remain seated or but mildly expostulatory at Ottawa. — Marjory MacMurchy, in 'The Globe.'

To Save the Oyster Beds.

An Order-in-Council has been passed providing that fishing for clams in bays, harbors, and other waters in Canada where oysters are taken shall be permitted only on areas set apart and marked out by the local fishery officer for the respective districts in which such fishing is prohibited. The idea of the regulation is to prevent persons committing depredations upon oyster beds when digging for clams.

Canada's Railways.

In 1850 Canada had 500 miles of railway; to-day she has 40,000—double the mileage of England.

The Gordon Store

Again we beat our Bargain Drum, we write for you to read—while you read to buy right—our aim to make your shopping a pleasure and satisfaction, and we will—

Ladies' Underskirts

Ours sell freely and save your time in making. They are all lengths, accordean plated, frilled, flounced or plain, colors red, garnet, purple, blue, grey, green, heliotrope and black, and stripes in great variety, at from $1.00 to $2.00 and $1.00.

For Skirts and Linings

All colors in Satens, plain, brocade, and fancy mercedized satens and black, from 12 1/2 to 25c. More—all colors for skirts, 25 to 75c. Percales, Russels, Gilberts, Selas, and all the lines of linings in the market.

B'ankets, Plush Sheets, Crib Blankets

These are the essence of comfort for cold nights and ensure sound sleep and good health, and big parcels leave the Gordon Store daily, because the qualities and prices are right, from 60c. to $1.25 to $1.00 and $5.00; all wool, union cotton.

Flannelette Wrappers and Outing Flannels

The New Waverly, the Sicilian and Albatross flannels; equal in appearance and superior in washing to the fine French flannels. The sterling flannels, and the German and French imitation flannels, Chatham has never seen a finer assortment to select from.

American Prints and Gingham

Navy blues, garnets, greys, anchor gingham. We have been asked daily for these goods; they are now in stock; all mothers know their value. Canadian and English prints, all styles; and many guaranteed not to puncture, you understand.

Our Millinery, Excelsior

Excelsior in taste, finish, style and every way, but price—every point is in favor of the customer. The Dress making section is receiving marked favor. Many fine trousseaus, suits, and dresses keep all hands busy.

FURS FIRST, FURS LAST, FURS ALL THE TIME.

WILLIAM GORDON

STOPS THE COUGH AND WORKS OFF THE COLD.

Laxative Bromo-Quinine Tablets cure a cold in one day. No Cure, No Pay. Price 25 cents.

The backward look is useful sometimes, but never when one is climbing.

Minard's Liniment Cures Garget in Cows.

WANTED—Teacher for School Section No. 5, Camden; second class. Please state salary. P. Smyth, Sec., Croton P. O., Ont.

WANTED!—Experienced girl to whom three dollars per week will be paid. Mrs. John A. Morton, third street.

TEACHER WANTED—Male—Holding second or third class certificate. Applications will be received up to Tuesday, Dec. 10th. Address John Covey, Sec. S. S. No. 6, Dover, Baldoon P. O.

TEACHER WANTED—In S. S. No. 18, Township Chatham. Applications received till December 7th; services begin Jan. 1st, 1902. Apply, stating salary expected, to J. G. Brown, Secy-Treas., Dresden, Ont.

TEACHER WANTED—For S. S. No. 12, Camden. State salary, qualifications and experience. Duties to commence January 3rd, 1902. Applications and testimonials received to December 1st. Address W. J. Milton, Thamesville.

SCHOOL TEACHER WANTED—For S. S. No. 4, Raleigh, male or female, qualifications and salary. Applications will be received up to 27th Dec. HARVEY JENNER, Secretary, Charing Cross.

WANTED—A female Catholic teacher, holding a second or third class certificate, for S. S. No. 14, Dover Township, Kent County; able to teach English and French. Duties to commence at the first of the year, 1902. Apply to Robt. A. Glover, Sec., Address Dover Centre, Ont.

FOR SALE OR TO RENT