BUNKOED JACOB

By G. W. Ogden

Copyright, 1903, by McClure's Newspaper Syndicate

No one knew how it happened that John Prune lodged on Shem Zook's place when he wandered into the neighborhood. Prune had been there so long people had ceased talking about his peculiarities and the strange agreement he had entered into with his employer. The marriage of Maggie revived countryside gossip. Some pitted Prune, holding him to be a simple minded chap, and others said it was wicked of Shem to lead him on by false promises as he had done. But when the whole story came out everybody laughed, Zook excepted.

In the first place there had been a sort of Jacob and Laban understanding between Prune and Zook in regard to Milly Ann. When Prune, middle aged, short, stumpy visaged, dusty and wearing a uniform of the Grand Army of the Republic, tramped up one day and asked for work, Zook took him in. Prune wasn't particular about wages, he said—just wanted his board and enough to buy overalls and tobacco.

For two years he was satisfied with that. Then, at harvest time, he began to grow restive and one morning stood before Zook with his possessions done up in half a newspaper and dressed in his Grand Army suit. Going away, he said, wages didn't suit him. Harvest hands were getting a dollar and a half a day.

Zook became thoughtful. "You're a good man, John," he said; "a powerful good man, an' I hate like smoke to lose you. Fact is, I'd begun to think to hope, I might say—that I'd have you as a son-in-law 'fore long."

John's mouth stood open in surprise. "Son-in-law!" he gasped.

"Yes," Zook answered. "There's Milly Ann a-growin' up, an' nobody round here I'd as leave have'er as you. An' men they's a good forty goes with each one of my gals. Milly Ann is the west end of the road."

Next morning John Prune didn't bring the milk to the house. Zook went down to the barn to negotiate with him concerning Tilda Jane, chuckling over the prospect of at least four years more of cheap help. Prune was not there. Zook looked in the loft where he slept. The Grand Army suit was gone from the nail behind the door.

Tilda Ann came running down the path with something in her hand.

"An' Tilda's gone," she panted, "an' here's a letter she must 'a' left for you."

Zook opened it and read: "Shem Zook—You air a durned raskil. You chet me out of Milly Ann, an' you chet me out of Maggie. They will not be eighty akens' catch. I chet that down. Yours truly, JOHN PRUNE."

P. S.—I have left you. J. P. N. B.—An' I have went along. ZERILDA.

Ghosts With No Originality.

When you have read one of these stories, you have read them all. Although the behavior of ghosts may appear eccentric when judged by the standard of conduct prevailing among the living, their habits are, in fact, most regular, they seem to possess little character or originality, and probably their ideas are very limited. Some of them walk along the passage or up the stairs; others knock on the walls or furniture, ring bells, slam doors or break crockery; now and then you can across one who shrieks, and there seem to be a few stray specimens who appear and disappear. But their faculties do not go beyond this. A very remarkable proof of their limitations or their slavish adherence to tradition is that, though I have before me at the present moment a dozen authenticated ghosts who have been heard walking upstairs, there seems to be no case on record in which a ghost has been heard walking down. Why anybody should think it worth while to chronicle the movements of such uninteresting creatures I cannot understand. An account of the day's doings of a flock of sheep would be very much more exciting—London Truth.

Boar Hunting in Brittany.

Boar hunting in Brittany is full of exciting incidents, and the boars seldom the unavenged, for, though they are beset by mounted hunters and poasantry on foot armed with guns, the lifeblood of many a boar is drawn before the savage old tuskier yields up his life. His dangerous powers of offense cease only with his last gasp.

Though the grip of the bulldog or the tye of the hounds, the din of horns and the cries of the beaters may force him from his lair to seek refuge in flight, that withdrawal may be set down rather to prudence and disgust than to fear. When at last he is brought to bay, with his back against a rock or a tree trunk, he is ready to defy a host.

Met in a narrow alley of the forest, neither man nor horse can withstand the avalanche of his onset. Not infrequently the hunter who loves his hounds will feel but little triumph even in the death of many boars if, having begun the season with a large pack, he ends it with a miserable remnant, having left all his best and bravest dogs on the field of battle.

A Truthful Sign.

Mr. Longear—By the way, did you ever know that large ears are a sign of generosity?

Miss Beauty—Of course, Mr. Longear. They are a sign that nature has been generous.—New York Weekly.

Maggie comin' on like a stalk o' corn, an' at the end o' your three years you can take her 'stid o' Milly Ann."

Hope lifted its head timidly in John Prune's heart. Maggie was comely, and altogether more desirable than Milly Ann. As time drew out Prune concluded that he had gained in the transaction.

Zook let a contract to a city man for the building of a barn. The contract or spurred around Maggie with the city airs and quickly won her. Zook, well pleased at the addition of such an energetic and useful person to his family, provided a second infare supper.

John Prune lost his temper. He waited until nearly midnight on the kitchen porch, with a singletree from the shadow of some morning glory vines, for Zook to come out, but Zook didn't come. The sound of revelry and Zook's big voice in laughter overflooded the house.

"They're a-laughin' at me," said Prune, and he bowed his head to the porch railing and sobbed. He was there when Zerilda went out to take a puff at her pipe. She placed her hand on his shoulder, patted it soothingly and said, "Poor man, poor fellow!"

"Wouldn't worry 'bout them there 'celful critters' in rander," she continued. "They're a-pokin' fun at a heap of more honest an' Christianer person than themselves, so they air, an' I told 'em it too."

"Thank you, ma'am," said Prune, a great wave of gratitude sweeping over him—"thank you f'om the bottom o' my heart!"

"What a' you mean foolin' away your time a-workin' out your insides here for Shem on promise of a gal an' forty akens' land? Shem he never did 'tend to let you have Milly Ann, neither did he 'tend to let you have Maggie. Brags all round the country what a cheap hand he's got. Shem he'll mornin' likely come round in the mornin' an' offer you Tilda Jane. She'll be big enough to marry in 'bout five year."

Prune reached out in the shadow and grasped the singletree. Zerilda went on:

"Always did puzzle me why a sensible man like you wanted to be humbugged so by Shem. Forty akens' an' a gal! Huh! I own the south end'n'd an' sixty, an' I'm as good as any gal Shem Zook ever raised 'r ever will raise!"

Next morning John Prune didn't bring the milk to the house. Zook went down to the barn to negotiate with him concerning Tilda Jane, chuckling over the prospect of at least four years more of cheap help. Prune was not there. The readers of this paper will be pleased to learn that there is at least one dreaded disease that science has been able to cure in all its stages and that is Catarrh. Hall's Catarrh Cure is the only positive cure now known to the medical fraternity. Catarrh being a constitutional disease, requires a constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure is taken internally, acting directly upon the blood and mucous surfaces of the system, thereby destroying the foundation of the disease, and giving the patient strength by building up the constitution and assisting nature in doing its work. The proprietors have so much faith in its curative powers, that they offer One Hundred Dollars for any case that it fails to cure. Send for list of testimonials. Address:
