"A dimeful?" he ejaculated, "What kind of a newfangled system of measurement is that you have here?" "It isn't new," replied the clerk. "And it is very simple. Just take a dime and pile as much of this nowde on it as will stick. That will be the proper dose. You couldn't get it any more exact if you measured for half an our with scales and spoons."

"Well," said the customer, "this is a new one on me." Then he proceeded to measure out a dose of the pink powder. As he did so a man standing close beside him sighed reminiscently.

"It makes me feel young to see you do that," he said. "They used to meas ure medicine that way when I was a kid. I supposed modern appliances had driven all those old methods of measurement out of the market."

"Not at all," said the clerk. "There are lots of places where they still take medicine by the dimeful."

Thanksgiving Day

Thanksgiving Day was observed as a very quiet, home day in Athens The Holiness Movement was the only religious organization that gave the day recognition by holding service in the church. In this will be seen a marked change from the manner in which the day was recognized only a few years ago. It is the same in places, and indicates that the true spirit of Thanksgiving Day has yielde at to the lighter spirit of pleasure.

X Kindly Remembered

A year ago a number of Athens adies honored their aged friend, Mrs. Benjamin Derbyshire, by holding a reunion at her home, Wight's Corners.
This year a similar honor was conferred, the meeting being held at the home of Miss Mary Livingston. Vic toria street, on Wednesday last. Those present were:—Mrs. Benjamin Derby-Lamb, Mrs. Elmer Halladay, Mrs. George Stevens, Mrs. S. J. Hughes, Mrs. M. A. Evertts, Mrs. Theodore Stevens. The excellent dinner was thoroughly enjoyed and the social pleasures of the occasion were freely indulged in by all.

In acknowledgment of this ver kind remembrance, Mrs. Derhyshire desires the Reporter to say that she fully appreciates the spirit that prompted it. During the years that she was confined to her home by physical disability, several of these same friends brightened her home and light ned the tedium of her illness. It is the expertant of the same friends brightened her home and light ned the tedium of her illness. It is the expertant of the same friends and fitted up in the most luxurious style, the Emperor said to his communion: desires the Reporter to say that she ince of most people as they grow old that "many forget and less regret," but she has always had the comfort of knowing that in Athens as well as in the home neighborhood there were sofa for each horse," was the reply. friends upon whose warm sympathy she could confidently rely. She i-indeed very grateful to them for all their kindnesses, and prays that when the sand in their life glass runs low they may be cheered and comforted by friends equally as loyal and true.

ANECDOTES OF ROYALTY.

Good Story of the Late Duke of Ci -Pace, the Jester of Queen Elizab and His Ditter Esterts.

The Emperor Charles VI. of Germany was passionately fond of music, and the composer Fuchs congratulated him: 'on his skill, saying, "What a pity, sire, you are not a conductor."

"Well it can't be helped," replied Charles. "I am only an Emperor, and must make the best of it."

Author's Gift.

On being presented with the second wolume of Gibbon's "Decline and Fall of the Roman Empire," His Royal Highness the Duke of Gloucester (George III.'s brother) received the distinguished author with great affability, saying to him, as he laid the "quarto" on the table: "Another d.— thick, square book! Always scribble, scribble, scribble! Eh, Mr. Gibbon?"

Seemed Familiar.

Several amusing stories have been told of the late Duke of Clarence, who was King Edward's eldest son. The Prince was visiting his friend and tutor, Mr. Oscar Browning, at the latter's rooms in Cambridge University. There hung upon the walls an engraving of Windsor Castle, taken from a point of view unfamiliar, perhaps, to the young Prince.

"What a beautiful place!" he exclaimed, as he looked at the picture. "Somehow, I seem to know it. I think I must have been there!"

"Windsor, sir, Windsor," said Mr. Browning. Of course, the Prince and everyone laughed heartily.

No Laughing Matter.

No Laughing Matter The Prince Imperial, killed in South Africa in 1879, was one day talking with the young King of Spain, then Prince of Asturias.

"What," asked the former, "is the lesson you find hardest to learn?"
The future King of Spain, in a lugubrious tone, replied, "Not to lugubrious tone, replied, "Not to laugh at the theatre when I am

They let me laugh as much as "They let me laugh as much as I like," replied the Prince Imperial.
"But, he added, referring to Bismarck, who had come on a visit to Napoleon III., the Prince's father—"what I don't like is to be obliged to smile and look pleasant to men who I know are my father's enemtes."

Prince Lucien Bonaparte, who died in 1891 at the age of seventy-eight, was a nephew of the great Emperor. He was a noted philologist, and lived long in England. The following story used to be told of him.

He was once presented with an address by an Irish municipal body, and by way of special compliment the document was composed and read in French. After listening to the the prince rose and speaking in it the prince rose and, speaking in English, expressed his gratitude, but added that he could not reply to the address as he would have wished, since it was his misfortune not to understand the Irish language!

Met His Match. King Frederick William III. (of Prussia) was very spare of words.
One day he learned that there was at Toplitz, where he was drinking the water, a Hungarian magnate still less talkative than His Majesty himself. An opportunity for a meeting was soon managed, and the following conversation took place, the King beginning: "Bathing?" "Drinking," was the reply. "Solding?"

"Soldier "Magnate." "Good."

"Policeman?"
"King." "Compliments."

Sharp Pace. Pace, jester to Queen Elizabeth, was so bitter in his retorts upon Her Majesty that he was forbidden her presence. After an absence of some time friends intervened and entreated Her Majesty to receive him back into favor, engaging for him that he would be more guarded in his wit for the future. The very first time they again met, however, Pace was as bad as ever. "Come on, Pace," said the Queen, in a gracious humor; "now we shall hear of our faults."

hear of our faults."

'No, madam," replied Pace; "I never talk of what is discoursed by all the world!"

Painful Experim William Carstairs, the Scottish divine, was suspected of being im-plicated in the Rye House Plot, but when put to the excruciating torture of the thumbscrews he endured is heroically, without confessing or implicating others. Some time after he became confidential secretary to William III., and was presented with the instrument by which he had been tortured. The King, wishing to see the measure of fortitude necessary to endure the terrible torture without making a confession of some sort, placed his thumbs in the machine and told Car-stairs to turn the screw. He turned slowly and cautiously.

"It is unpleasant," said the King,
"yet it might be endured. You are trifling with me; turn the screw so that I may really feel pain similar to that you felt."

Carstairs gave a sharp turn. The

to that you felt."

Carstairs gave a sharp turn. The King shouted with pain, and when released said that under such agony he would have confessed to anything,

"How many times has he run for the office?"
"Every time the other feller got
