City Rule in England.

Illuminating Discussion by Ambassador Bryce Before the City Club of New York.

New York, March 14.—The British Ambassador as the guest of the City Club lectured before members and guests on "Municipal Government in England." Toward the end questions came from all parts of the hall. Mr. Bryce responded quickly, although at times he had to admit that the subjects on which information was sought were so complex and involved that they could not be explained in a few minutes. Possibly the comment on municipal government in his own country that England is appreciating more and more the value of permanent retaining in municipal office and liberally paying expert officials. In the course of his two-hour lecture Mr. Bryce gave a general description of the workings of municipal government in England and finished with a detailed explanation of individual responsibility. The honor of introducing the British Ambassador fell to Seth Low, the toast-master. President Charles present to hear him six of the eight members of the Board of Estimate.

After the City Club men had drunk a toast standing to the health of Ambassador Bryce, and still standing had clapped hands for a full two minutes. Mr. Bryce began his speech. He said:

"The first point I have to note about our municipal system is that it is generally uniform. All our municipalities consist of towns and cities. There is no technical distinction between a city and a town, for a city is merely a complimentary title given to some of the largest towns. The system is a little different in Scotland, but the main features are similar to those of England. Our municipal governments are created by general statutes, which are amended from time to time by subsequent statutes which statutes lay down the outline or general structure of the government, and show in a general way the system under which the government is created. The form of our government is everywhere substantially the same. There is a council composed of two classes of persons, councillors and aldermen, and there is a mayor who is not elected separately, but chosen by the council and aldermen generally from among themselves. The elections as a rule are pure. There is very little bribery; there is practically no personation or repeating. "In the majority of our municipalities the elections are nominally at least conducted upon party lines; that is to say a candidate avows himself to be a Liberal or a Tory, and the party organizations are called in to conduct his campaign, but in point of fact the elections do not greatly turn upon party lines. In other words, it is not felt that it is necessary for municipal purposes to keep a party organization always working and at full steam in the interests of the party generally, so little has party to do with the conduct of municipal affairs. I have known a parliamentary election to take place immediately afterwards which would completely belie the results that men had tried to deduce from a municipal election.

"There is little or none of the trouble that is felt here in securing a renomination. It is almost a matter of course to renominate a man if he has been faithful to his party, in Parliament or in the Council, and if he is not personally objectionable. The Councillors are elected by wards. There are usually three elected for each ward and one is elected every year, the term of service being three years. They are the directly elected members of the Municipal Council. The aldermen are chosen by the Council each November, immediately after the election, and the aldermen are chosen to serve for six years instead of for three.

"The mayor is not directly elected, but is chosen by the council, not necessarily from among itself. As a rule, I should say in the great majority of cases, the enormous majority of cases, the mayor is chosen from the council. The council with us has no those important special functions which belong to the mayor here. He is merely the chairman of the council, and he has no more influence than belongs to a chairman whose business it is to see that the business is properly conducted.

"Very much depends upon his personal quality. It is, however, a position of dignity. He is always addressed as 'Your Worship' or 'Your Honor.' He wears a gold chain; the gold chain is often an object of great beauty, and it comes down sometimes from somewhat distant antiquity, and these attributes mark out the post as a post to which some importance is attached and in which it is always an object to secure a man of ability and character, and if possible also of high social position. I suppose that there are very few mayors who are not considerably out of pocket at the end of their terms of office by the expenditure to which they are put in sustaining the dignity of the towns by the entertainments that they give.

"I may say that in general we have apart from the councillors no elective officers. The Government is in touch with the people only through the election of the councillors. Everybody else is elected and appointed by the council itself. Therefore every council divides itself into committees and the government of the boroughs is practically vested in these committees. The committees are appointed not by the mayor but by the council. We have no custom in England at all of leaving any individual person in charge of a committee either in the House of Commons nor the House of Lords nor in any county council nor in any municipal council do we give so important a function as the appointment of a committee to any single officer. These things are always vested in the body itself.

Although it was 11.30 p.m. before the ambassador concluded, not more than half a dozen of the audience left their seats. When he closed he was applauded for two or three minutes.

Disorderly Scene

At Ottawa When an M. P. Calls Another a Liar—Retraction Only Secured by Order of Deputy-Speaker.

Ottawa March 17.—There was a scene of disorder in the House this afternoon while Mr. Campbell, of the Supply and General Committee of supply, Glen Campbell, Conservative member for Dauphin, Manitoba, had charged that there was political discrimination in the administration of homestead laws, and Dr. Neely, Liberal for Humboldt, Saskatchewan, retorted by the statement, "It is known that my honorable friend (Mr. Campbell) has taken steps himself on certain occasions to lead even officials of the Government to do what was not in the best interests of the country."

"My hon. friend is a liar, absolutely a liar," declared Mr. Campbell. The Deputy Speaker at once interposed. Mr. Sam Hughes tried to get the floor, but Mr. Campbell interrupted, "I call him a liar," he retorted.

Mr. Campbell, who was in a white heat, vigorously pounded his desk and his voice trembled in anger. "What I said goes, he is absolutely a liar," interjected Mr. Campbell. "But if it is not parliamentary I take the words back. But he is absolutely a liar."

The Deputy Speaker again called Mr. Campbell to order, but he came back again with an even more emphatic statement, "I will not take a word back, he is a liar, first, last and all the time."

Deputy Speaker McIntyre was only able to secure a retraction of the words, after warning the Manitoban that he must otherwise report it to the House for action. He said he did so only at his orders.

Then came from Mr. Schaffner and Col. Hughes a demand for a retraction on the part of Dr. Neely, and a further LONDON, April 2. The attitude of the Imperial German Chancellor has not dampened British zeal over the Arbitration Treaty. The projected demonstration to be held in Albert Hall has been abandoned in favor of a wider national movement, which took the form of nine hundred meetings being held yesterday and to-day in all cities in the Kingdom. Councils representing nineteen hundred Evangelical Churches passed resolutions supporting proposed treaty and welcoming the idea of American Churches observing April 2nd as Arbitration Sunday, and copies of the resolutions were forwarded Taft and Grey. News that negotiations had actually begun, was received at the meetings, and "Arbitration" was the theme of the sermons at most churches. A great peace demonstration was held at Whitefield's Tabernacle, where Lord Coleridge presided. Augustine Birrell was the speaker, and after quoting "There is a tide in the affairs of man," he said, "To-day there is a great tide and peace wave rolling across the Atlantic, that ought to be taken at the flood." Referring at length to Von Holweg's speech, he said that in his opinion, though it was below the grandeur of the theme, yet it contained passages of hope.

MEXICO CITY, April 3. Committing himself to the advocacy of many reforms demanded by the revolutionists, although professedly bowing only to the influence of public opinion, President Diaz answered his critics through his semi-annual message at the opening of the National Congress.

discussion ensued as to what words were used by Dr. Neely. Mr. Campbell said: "No man alive can come to my face and say to me, 'You did a mean or a crooked thing' and this member from Humboldt cannot do it anywhere inside of this House and he cannot get Jim Jeffries to do it outside of this House. If they do, I will give them some of the fairest sport they have ever had." The matter was settled by Dr. Neely stating that as long as Mr. Campbell made an emphatic denial of wrongdoing he was prepared to apply the whitewash brush and put the hon. member on a pedestal.
