Ambitions For Airmen.

The Air is by no Means Conquered Yet.

Not long ago that famous flyingman, Orville Wright, accomplished a feat which has never before been paralleled. From the crest of a tall sand hill he launched himself into mid air on an engineless glider, and, lifted by a strong gale, rose to a height of two hundred feet. There he hung almost motionless, poised in mid air like a great sea bird, for just over five minutes, then dropped safely earthwards.

This marvellous performance seems to show that the time may come when aeroplanes will be able to hover over one spot just as a hawk does over its prey. At present, however, no plane yet built can do anything of the kind, and in the case of most heavier-than-air machines a minimum speed of forty miles an hour is necessary, or else they drop at once.

To build a machine that can remain motionless in mid air is one of the principal ambitions of air craftsmanship.

There is one form of airship, which, if it could be perfected, would certainly fulfil this ambition. This is the so-called helicopter.

Aeroplanes that Hover.

The helicopter is merely a platform for the airman and engine, with an upright shaft fitted at the top with a screw propeller. The idea is that this, when revolving, shall draw or screw the machine straight up into the air.

The helicopter has no wings, it is cheap to construct, simple to work and if one could be built to rise, it would of course remain stationary over any given spot, and could land anywhere. On the other hand, it would be a horribly dangerous contrivance, for if anything went wrong with the engine, there would be no planing down. It would drop like a stone.

Several helicopters have been built, but so far, we believe, not one has succeeded in rising into the air.

One great ambition of airmen is to fly across the Atlantic. Travelling at sixty miles an hour, a very moderate speed for a plane, this would take two days and two nights. But at present it is quite impossible to build a machine (apart from a gas bag) that could keep the air for so long. The reason is that it could not carry sufficient fuel.

Now, a big bird of prey, such as the peregrine falcon, supports only about one-third of a pound of weight to every square foot of wing surface. The ordinary aeroplane has to carry two pounds of weight to each square foot. So what the airman is looking for is some much lighter form of engine. If he could get this he could carry ever so much more petrol, and so make immensely longer flights without descending for fresh fuel.

Airman's Worst Enemy.

Many brave airmen have gone to their death through side slip. If he turns too rapidly, the plane tilts so sharply that the pilot may not be able to right it. What is wanted is some invention to prevent this kind of thing, and it is on these lines the Lieutenant Dunne has been working. He has succeeded so far that he has actually made a two-mile flight without once touching the levers controlling his planes.

The flying man's worst enemy is the "hole in the air." Without a moment's warning the plane flashes into a layer of air which is thinner than the rest—and falls. Mr. Graham White describes it as very like "tumbling down a flight of giant steps each thirty feet high."

Give the airmen some new sort of instrument which would warn him beforehand of these empty spaces, and you at once supply one of his greatest needs.—Pearson's Weekly.

'Cascarets' for a Sick, Sour Stomach.

Gently but thoroughly cleanse and regulate your Stomach, Liver and Bowels while you sleep.

That awful sourness, belching of acid and foul gases; that pain in the pit of the stomach, the heartburn, nervousness, nausea, bloating after eating, feeling of fullness, dizziness and sick headache, means a disordered stomach, which cannot be regulated until you remove the cause. It isn't your stomach's fault. Your stomach is as good as any.

Try Cascarets; they immediately cleanse and regulate the stomach, remove the sour, undigested and fermenting food and foul gasses; take the excess bile from the liver and carry off the constipated waste matter and poison from the intestines and bowels. Then your stomach trouble is ended. A Cascaret to-night will straighten you out by morning—a 10 cent box from any drug store will keep your stomach sweet; liver and bowels regular for months. Don't forget the children—their little insides need a good, gentle cleansing, too.

But, as a matter of fact, no drunkard is as smart as the man who doesn't drink at all.

The Secret of a Good Complexion.

This is the season for evening parties, social events, etc. Why not look your best? Why let your complexion suffer by contrast with other ladies? Why not ensure a good complexion? You can do this on sound, natural lines by using Zam-Buk, nature's herbal balm.

Zam-Buk is a skin food; and complexion is purely a matter of skin health. Zam-Buk smeared lightly over the face each night acts as a skin tonic. It stimulates the cells beneath the cuticle to healthy action, makes the capillaries and blood vessels work, and the vigorous circulation thus started carries away secreted impurities. Waxy, sallow deposits are thus removed. Hard, pimply growths are softened and disappear. That yellow tinge gives place to the pink of health and the white, velvety "look" and "feel" which healthy skin alone has.

Isn't this wiser than relying upon talcum powder and cosmetics? These only put on a "complexion" from the outside. It doesn't last. Zam-Buk helps nature to build up a complexion from blood and tissue. It lasts.

Zam-Buk also cures skin diseases, pimples, ulcers, abscesses, blood-poison, eruptions, cuts, burns, scalds, chafes, eruptions, cuts, burns, scalds, chapped places, seapsores, piles, etc. 50c. box all druggists and stores, or Zam-Buk Co., St. John's, Nfld., but beware of harmful substitutes and imitations.

No More Ice.

"A revolution in the fish trade is foreshadowed by the invention of a Scottish-Australian gentleman, Mr. J. R. Henderson, who is now in London," says the Pall Mall Gazette. "This is nothing less than the abolition of the use of ice for the transport and preservation of fresh fish."

"First, the fish is placed in a cooling chamber and slowly brought down to a temperature of 32 degrees F.; this part of the process takes about two hours. Its purpose is to extract the specific (or latent) heat of the fish. It is a well known fact that with fish which has been kept in ice decay starts from within, near the bone. This is because the latent heat has not been removed."

"The fish is next plunged into a tank of sea-water, fortified by the addition of 15 per cent. of salt to prevent the bath from freezing at the extremely low temperature—11 deg. F., or 21 deg. below freezing point. At the same time the water is kept in rapid motion by an electrically driven pump. During its passage the water passes through a filtering chamber charged with willow-charcoal and nodules of coke, which absorb certain noxious gases. After four hours the fish are removed from the tank; and then they are impervious to decay for anything from a week to a fortnight—perhaps longer."

The new process costs but little, and also promises large economies to the trade in carriage. By dispensing with ice, about one-fourth of the carriage would be saved, in addition to the cost of the ice itself.

"Corner" In Bedsteads.

"An alleged attempt by British bedstead manufacturers to form a ring to coerce retail buyers to purchase metal bedsteads only from members of the Bedstead Manufacturers' Federation," which would lead to an all-round increase in the price of metal bedsteads, was discussed at a meeting of the Drapers' Chamber of Trade," says the Morning Post. "It was stated that the Federation offered a rebate of 10 per cent. to be paid by the secretary of the Federation at the end of six months, provided that the buyers pledged their word that they had not bought their bedsteads from any manufacturer who was not a member of the Federation. 'The prices of metal bedsteads had already gone up by 11 to 14 per cent., and would go up still more, unless the scheme were defeated,' said the chairman. A resolution was unanimously adopted strongly recommending the trade to reject the scheme."

What They Got Besides

Somebody recalled the other day that Dr. Aked was one of the late General Booth's firmest supporters.

Once, during a very severe winter, Dr. Aked appealed to his congregation for funds to provide poor children with breakfasts. A considerable sum was subscribed, and Dr. Aked arranged that some thousands of free meals would be provided at the Salvation Army barracks to the children in neighboring slums.

After a while, complaints began to reach Dr. Aked. "We provide the money," somebody grumbled, "and the Salvation Army gets all the credit."

"They may get the credit," retorted Dr. Aked, "but they also get the fleas! If you want the first in this case you've got to take the second." After that there was no more grumbling.
