The Motorcycle.

BY H. L. RANN.

The motorcycle is a portable gasoline engine with a stuttering form of speech and the disposition of a coyote. It is used to carry people from one point to another at the rate of one mile every fifteen seconds and incidentally to discourage pedestrians from crossing the street without having to duck under a ray.

Motorcycles are so constructed that they never kill anybody except the innocent bystander. Nobody ever heard of a motorcycle blowing up and kicking a speed maniac into the future state. The motorcycle always picks out somebody who is in perfect health and shuffles him into the great beyond before he has time to straighten out an overcharge at the butcher shop. On this account, motorcycle victims should be regulated by law, and nobody should be allowed to be killed by one unless his life insurance will wipe out his outstanding debts.

Motorcycle riders always wear green goggles so that they cannot see anybody who gets in the way. This gives them a comfortable sense of security and enables them to run down people who ought to be on the sidewalk or up a tree without being annoyed by their conscience. As the owner of a motorcycle aims to ride with his head down, he never knows when he passes over a lady victim, unless he punctures his rear tire on her hatpin.

The motorcycle has a deep-toned exhaust which warns pedestrians that the most successful form of sudden death ever invented is about to perform in their midst. Many a pedestrian has heard this exhaust coming down the road two miles away and tried to get across the street in two frenzied jumps, only to be overtaken in the second leap and scattered in four directions from his last transfer. It is more dangerous to attempt to pass in front of an intoxicated motorcycle than it is to mount a trolley car backward. Some motorcyclists slow up on passing through a crowd, but they make up for it by burning large holes in suburban pavements.

For Clean Streets.

In commenting on the aftermath of the western floods the Boston Traveler draws a lesson which it thinks should be impressed upon the governing authorities of even those cities which have not been drowned in water. It cites, without giving authority, the states of affairs after the Deluge, as follows:

"Soon after the flood had subsided and Noah, his family and animals had vacated the Ark, the Ararat street cleaning department was organized and proceeded to do its duty. One method which it employed was to gather refuse, filth and germs in little piles along the sides of the roads, there to remain until they could be taken care of by the wind and blown into stores, factories and houses to the detriment of health and property."

"Some of the methods employed by the Ararat street department are lost in the mists of antiquity, but that particular one is not. It is the custom today, as it was in the days of Noah, to assemble refuse, filth and germs of the streets in piles, where the dirt and filth and germs may dry and where they may be caught up by the spring winds and scattered hither and thither. Later the street cleaning carts arrive, and merely because the winds have done what the street cleaning carts should have done, there is not so much refuse, filth and germs to haul away and there is less labour for the department."

"But isn't it almost time to adopt new methods—in Boston and outside? How would it do to remove the refuse, filth and germs in the same day and even in the same hour that they are scraped and piled?"

He Had a Way of Getting There.

He had a way of getting there. Not a very brilliant chap. Lots of men were cleverer. Lots of men had far more snap. Never seemed to make a fuss. Quite like he belonged in. An "what most astonished us. Somehow always seemed to win.

He had a way of getting there. Never quit if things went wrong. Didn't give way to despair. Just went plugging right along. Others got far more applause. An attention in the game. No one seemed to know he was in it. till on top he came.

He had a way of getting there. Just persistent, plodding on. Never knew him to declare. Hope was absolutely gone. Doing something every day. Everlastin' diggin' in. Havin' not a word to say. That's the way he used to win.

The Craze For "A Good Time."

The typical Australian craze for "a good time," says the Sydney Catholic Press, "destroys many a home." Normal amusements are neglected. Women are not content with comfort. They are not satisfied to live a home life, with normal variations by way of outside amusement. They crave the nightly after-theatre supper, the glare of the lights, the music, the excitement, the crowd. Men likewise fall victims to the perverted idea of "a good time." Faithful wives mope at home, while gay husbands flutter in the midnight glare. The era of extravagance, with its false conception of "a good time," is the progenitor of the empty church, the empty cradle, and the home in which love is a mockery. The greatest service people can perform for the nation is not so much to encourage the military spirit as to unite the restoration of normal ideas, and the normal life, which means national strength, and the absence of which means national decay.

Brigade Dinners.

The Warrant and Non-Commissioned Officers of the C.B.B. held their annual dinner at Smithville, last night, and a pleasant time was spent, by all who attended. Sergt. N. Rice, who leaves for Calgary shortly, was presented with a ten years' service pendant and a set of gold sleeve links. After an excellent menu had been discussed, a comprehensive toast list was taken up. The speeches made were interspersed by songs. The singing of the National Anthem brought the event to a close.

Last night at Wood's West End restaurant, Mr. S. Lumsden, who has been a member of the officers of the Nid. Highlanders, of which corps Mr. Lumsden was a popular member. Covers were laid for about forty persons and a jolly good time was passed.

The Casino.

At the Casino Theatre, to-night, the Casino players will present "In Slavery Days." This is an excellent domestic comedy-drama of the social life during that most picturesque of American periods, "Before the War" in the Southern States. The atmosphere of those days is faithfully reproduced, with its gentle women, its chivalrous men, its cruel slave-drivers and its loyal old negroes. There is a pretty love story and a great abundance of cello, lively comedy.

S. U. F. Celebrates.

The annual soiree of the S. U. F. was held in the British Hall last night and it surpassed all successes yet held by that organization. Over three hundred people participated in the dance which commenced at 9 o'clock, but was discontinued while supper, provided by the lady friends of the S. U. F., was going on. The ballroom was prettily adorned. Myron's orchestra supplied the music. At 2 o'clock this morning the affair terminated.

At The Nickel.

There were many other attractions last night, but the Nickel was crowded throughout the evening. There was as usual a Gaumont graphic, which was followed by "At the end of the Trail," a story of the Klondike. "A timely Rescue" is an interesting drama which had the attention of all. "The Great Diamond Robbery" is a comedy which provided much mirth. Misses Gardner and Geurin will be held in Synd Hall on Tuesday next, April 15th, at 8.30 p.m., by the Catholic Women's Association. Afternoon and 6 o'clock teas served; 4c. admission, 10 cts. At night a Soiree will be held. Admission, 20 cts.—apr 8, 21.

Not at Port au Port.

On several occasions during the last three months, the Telegram has referred to the disappearance of one James McDonald, a habitue of the West End, who was homeless but who had many friends there. The police asserted when we made inquiries, that the man had gone to work at the lime stone quarries at Port au Port, but this we doubted, as his trip (up to 70 years) and the condition of his health must certainly preclude his engaging in such strenuous labor. Young men, residents of the West End, who knew McDonald well, and who returned from Port au Port yesterday, say that the man is not there nor has he been there, and those who knew him well and remembered his habit of boarding the Allan Line and other steamers to get a meal, are convinced that it was McDonald's body which was found incriminated in the engine room of the Carthaginian on her arrival at Glasgow. The finding of the Newfoundland coins near the body and the 3c. boots worn by the Newfoundland fisherman, were significant facts in the premises, and all who knew McDonald believe he was buried to death on the Carthaginian. He was a harmless, genial dispositioned man, and for several years past had no home of his own, but boarded with friends in different parts of the West End at various times.
