Higsen of Massachusetts Was Nominated for the Presidency

Chicago, July 28.—The independence party today adopted a platform which perfected its temporary organization. But little work was accomplished at the first session because of a protracted debate among the members of the resolutions committee on the question of how the money to be raised should be expressed. The tentative draft of this plank provided for the issuance of all money by the government. The platform as presented to the convention demanded the creation of a central government to which the currency should pass to the people.
