THERSDAY MORNING, JANUARY 19, 1882.

POOR CANADA!

What is to become of this unfortunat country? A consultation of doctors in being held over her still living body, and we get intimations that the wind up "crowner's quest" must quickly follow; flicting courses of treatment advised be adopted: She can be saved only by British connection and free trade maintained together, says the Globe. British connection. of course, says the Mail, but with protecection instead of free trade for the other part of the prescription. With their respective trade principles wide as the poles sunder, the two party organs still agree in arguments that carry Canada's dependence on the mother country to the length of subserviency and even slavishness. But it is not alone as a humble and unworthy dependency of Great Britain that Canada is viewed by all the doctors now engaged on her desperate and woebegone case. Some of them there are who think the only proper course is to treat her as a dependency, ple we must be in any case. Being incapable of thinking for ourselves, we must persome outside authority. The thinking thankful for. must be done for us. either in London or ourselves is simply preposterous.

how hopeless the whole attempt is. The vince still less. Hudson's Bay territory has a six month's And we have been delving more deeply winter, during which the thermometer goes into the precious mine of literary wealth down twenty degrees below Minnesota re. to be found in the columns of the Globe, gulation figures. Why should Englishmen and we have discovered that the members go there to freeze, when the rich slopes of the Ontario opposition are men devoid and comfortable climate of the Western of principle, bankrupt in reputation, desti States invite them? Let us quote some of tute of ability, and utter strangers t the Tribune's own words about poor patriotic aspirations. That what they palm Canada: Englishman to judge of the unconquent to difficulties in the way of the emigrant to the Canadian colonies, many of which arise from the mere fact that they are colonies A man of energy has to struggle against the dead weight of a super-imposed political structure and the lethargy of a settled population. A proof of the blindness of the English to matters as they are in their American colonies is shown in the feat that gangs of boys, picked out of the slums of London, are sent over and dumped in the wild recesses of Upper Canada, where a few French inhabitants who cannot speak a word of English struggle desperately to keep themselves from want. If, as Lord Lorns urges, immigration to Canada is to be assisted and protected, it should be at least guided by some more accurate knowledge of the country than the so-called immigra-of the country than the so-called immigration societies of London seem to possess." We may admit that the existing colonial relations and our rather cumbersome super imposed political structure are not of the best for the country's advancement. But it is stretching things amazingly to speak of "the lethargy of a settled population" as being characteristic of Canadians as a whole people. In business matters the country is astir with enterprise—thanks in great part to the N.P.-and in matters political the country is moving too, a fact which appears to give some uneasiness to the leaders of both the old parties respectively. London emigration societies are not particularly well informed about the Dominion, but in this respect the Tribune itself makes quite a respectable effort at blundering when it speaks of London boys being dumped in the wild recesses of Umer Canada, where a few French inhabitants who cannot speak a word of Eng. East Lothian (the cradle of high farming) lish struggle desperately to keep themselves from want! Here is a bit of exaggeration case the rent has fallen from £1,600 to intensified, which leaves the truth clean £1,000, in another from £520 to £200, and

The Toronto Telegram asks why the Globe, which is so strongly in favor of reciprocity with the United States, should object to the larger proposal of commercial union. We may here distinguish the two by saying that, as generally understood at present, the former appears to stand for free trade in natural products only, while the latter would include manufactures as well. Upon the consideration of the great and vital trial, and that there would be cause for differences which exist between the two regret were it to be cut short through mere proposals we do not now enter, but let us note the doleful conclusion to which the Telegram would bring us;

The argument used by those who oppose commercial union is that it would inevitably commercial union is that it would inevitably lead to political union. The opponents of a reciprocity treaty could fairly claim that such a treaty would lead to the same result, so that if those who advocate larger com-mercial relations with the states in the shape of a zollverein are friends of annexa-tion those who advocate the same thing by another name must be friends of annexation too. But leaving aside all these charges too. But leaving aside all these charges and countercharges it is apparent to all of us that what Canada requires, if she is not to die of atrophy, is free admission to the markets of the continent to which she being a suthorized to recount ballots in parlia

From this it appears that in the forty We cannot make our own living or maintain may live at all, and not die of atrophy, she must surrender her separate existence, and become a dependency of the United States.

It is strange that the Globe did not find time to write so good an article earlier in the day. While its columns were gorged with fat advertisements of these peculations it gave its readers no advice, out now when the boom has subsided, and after it has drawn thousands of dollars from this source, it tells people to have a are. It looks as if the Globe's silence in he town lot business, or its puffs in the quack medicine line are to be had at the regular advertising rates.

We have thought over all this. We have tried to reconcile it with the fact that the speeches alleged to have been delivered by these two sets of delivered by these two sets of bonanza, and twenty-six pieces of glittering dishonest, incapable beings really gold coin fell out, worth $10 or more each.

These coins were concealed in an inch and read passably well as they are reported, the Mail, and we had just about made up our mind that the speeches were all bogus and were really written by the editors of the two party newspapers.

But, again, we read the Mail and we found that the editor of the Globe is mentally and otherwise just about as bad as the poor imbeciles on the treasury benches. Evidently then he didn't concoct and contrive and manufacture the speeches accredited to Mr. Mowat and his colleagues and followers. Then a further reference to the Globe has made it plain that the literary weakling who edits the Mail is mentally incapable of writing anything fit to read. So then he didn't evolve the speeches ascribed to Mr. Meredith and his followers. We give it up. Our readers must just puzzle it out for themselves. But we will cheerfully give for the first correct solution of the enigma a splendid great Northwest.

THE LOCAL GOVERNMENT will doubtless ask the house to vote money for reprinting the two volumes of the report of the agricultural commission which contain the popular and useful part of the evidence and a resume of the whole.

Prince Chowansky, examined by the court with respect to these horrors, avowed that they had been perpetrated by his order, and had the audacity to add that nobody but a person utterly ignorant of military matters could experience any surprise at his method of dealing with insubordinate soldiers." His comrades took occasion to disavow this assertion publicly: occasion to disavow this assertion publicly occasion to disavow this assertion publicly; the court' acquitted the accused from the charge of murder, and the colonel of the regiment, Baron Meyendorf, forthwith resigned his commission. But something still more disenchanting was seen in the village inn, kept by Herod. Hunting Accidents in England. An unusual number of accidents have re cently occurred in the hunting field in England. Lord John Manners fell from his horse while hunting with the Belvoir hounds, sprained his wrist seriously, and slightly injured his neck. The Rev. T. Heathcote, while following the Duke of Rutland's hounds, came to an unusually foul fence, his horse at the same time slipping into a ditch and pitching him over the fence into an adjoining field. From the severe shock which Mr. Heathcote received his limbs became paralyzed, and the remains pointing out that Lefroy has been tried, or a precarious condition. While Lord Grey de Wilton was out with his hounds the horse suddenly threw up his head, striking him on the eye with great violence. Mr. Briggs, who for the last seven years has had a large stud of hunters at Whitchurch, sustained a fracture of the collar bone by being thrown from his horse while hunting with the Cheshire hounds at Tattenhall.
