Now York. Night's state queen, just risen, appeared A ball of fiery red, And myriad hosts of brilliant lamps Were burning overhead; But soon bedimm'd with a gathering cloud, As wrapp'd in death's untimely shroud, Each starry light expired; And hid hehind the folds of night," New York. POETRY.

THE LOST CHILD.

The margin was near the rills; And naught above the earth was seen, Save here and there with glittering sheen,

A peerless star revealed Its gem upon the brow of night, And sparkled far in heaven's bright

The queenly orb withdrew her light, And modestly retired

Led ou the howing hast, And rusting through the birchin boughs, The snow fell thick and fast :

Till o'er the mountain's hoary head Stern Winter's icy robes were spread,

And lost was every path. Till spirit voices in the wild Abstracted from the wand'ring child The courage childhood bath.

She drew her mantle to her breasts,

Again the flowers of spring had come,

To her the chiming spheres were rife, All nature seemed replete with life; But how illusive were The scenes to which that dream had led

Her fancy, and how soon they fled And left her lifeless there !

The storm subsided ; winter passed

Within yon forest glen'; The child's remains were found at last,

Sweet voices filled the air, The music of the insect's hum, She deemed was everywhere:

The Storm God in his mad career

Illimitable field.
