president and a majority of both houses favored the repeal of these laws, and at once the majority by the introduction of bills to repeal the silver purchase clauses of the so-called Sherman act. Two months have passed since then, yet these unwise laws are not yet repealed. With the exception of a resolution providing for the payment of travelling expenses of the members of both houses, these two months have been entirely barren of any results whatever. Day after day and week after week have passed, yet the friends of silver in the senate have thus far been able to block all legislation and prevent what the president and a majority of both houses, backed by an overwhelming majority of the people, so earnestly desire. No vote can be taken so long as any member has the floor, and the silver men announce their ability to occupy the floor till Christmas or longer if necessary. Everything like serious debate has long since ceased, and the time is now mainly taken up with roll-calls, reading of newspaper extracts, and other documents. At first, the people were rather documents. At first, the people were rather amused with the novel performance; but of late this feeling has given way to one of anti-silver men will be compelled to yield which is all the silver men hope for.

In the British and Canadian parliaments such a dead-lock as this is impossible, as under the rules of these houses a vote can be forced at any time the leaders wish. The American senate, on the contrary, has always prided itself on being the most dignified and august legislative body on earth, where neither closure rules nor gag laws of the present week, with many promises of a still further increase in the near future. were necessary or allowed. Its present experience is likely to show the folly of these lofty pretensions, and to lead to the adoption of some wholesome rules whereby that freedom of speech, of which our neighbors are so accustomed to boast, will be properly guarded and restricted. During the last two months the attendance has been all that its promoters could desire, so much larger in fact than during the first three months that it is now thought that it will prove a success financially. The exhibition will be officially closed at the end of the present month, although an effort is being made by the directors to keep it open after that period, and various expedients are talked of to attract visitors after the formal closing.

"A word to the wise is sufficient."

The events now taking place in the United States senate are opening the eyes of the people of that nation to a serious defect in their legislative machinery. It is now two months since the president called congress together in extra session. A financial crisis existed at the time, caused, the president declared in his proclamation summoning congress, by the operation of unwise laws, which it was necessary should be repealed at the earliest possible moment. The president and a majority of both houses favored the repeal of these laws, and at once the president and a majority of both houses favored the repeal of these laws, and at once the president and a majority of both houses favored the repeal of these laws, and at once the president and a majority of both houses favored the repeal of these laws, and at once the president and a majority of both houses favored the repeal of these laws, and at once the president and a majority of both houses favored the repeal of these laws, and at once the president and a majority of both houses favored the repeal of these laws, and at once that it will give satisfaction to the farmer, and be made a financial success.
