One of the exercises entitled "How some dillies went to India" was received with special approbation. A collection of $6.73 was taken at the close for mission purposes.

THE LOST MINE MYTH.

Quebec is Well Off in Tales of Fabulous Wealth Underground. Every mountain range from Maine to Mexico has its mysterious lost mine fable, of which the Pigdig and the Broyfogle in Nevada are perhaps the most famous, for these two are not limited to local liars, but are told by old prospectors and newspaper reporters from one end of the land to the other, wherever mining items interest a company. A company has recently floated, claiming to have recaptured the stray Broyfogle. Locally, in the Eastern Townships of Quebec, Orford, Stoke and other mountains have their little story, each of a man lost in the hills who picked up a rock to play at an imaginary wolf, or grabbed a chunk of bed-rock just as he was slipping over a precipice, or uncovered untold wealth under his camp-fire, the melted metal running in tiny rivulets through the ashes (although it would require several degrees more heat than a fire of sticks could produce to melt any of the precious metals, but that is trivial in view of the fact that traces of the fire were afterwards found) but, overtaken by night, got so confused, that, after having found himself, never again could he locate the spot. Or often the exposure and hardships of the night brought on fever and the man died, leaving only his blessing and the story to his family. In Orford the find was copper, in Stoke gold and silver, in Prospect Hill "a nugget" as big as the yolk of an egg, strange to say, parted in the middle, half remaining in the ledge and half in the piece broken off. The time and effort spent in the vain endeavor to locate these fairy finds would surprise you. And you might as well argue with a man who thinks a hazel twig has a mysterious affinity to water, when that water is several feet under ground, as to talk sense to one struck with the lost mine mania. In Emberton, it is the "Lost Stone Mine," and the finder carved an Indian and an arrow on a birch tree, so many paces from a range post. If you doubt the story, for $5 or perhaps $50 if you look easy, a native will take you to that post. What better proof do you want of the truth of the tale? And so round each little mountain range, you will find your old inhabitant with his tale of vanished treasure, which it will be just as well for you to accept, for if you try to use against it.

In one place, a vein of asbestos with five-inch fibre, has crawled into some crevice and pulled the crevice in after it. This was not figured on when the amalgamated put out its claim to 70 per cent., of known supply, in Quebec.—The Canadian Mining Journal.

Numbers Replace Names.

The erection of the splendid new postoffice in Owen Sound has necessitated a radical change in street naming and a few days ago Judge Wildfield sanctioned a bylaw passed by the Town Council which obliterated every name in town's fifty miles of streets and substituting thereof numbers. Postal delivery, if adopted in Owen Sound, would require a different installation in the postoffice, and the Postoffice Department has asked the council to comply with the regulations requiring name signs and house numbers. Many of the streets had two names, some three and others four in different sections. To meet the demand for a reasonable change, these must all be put under the hammer. Many of the street names had local significance and trouble was in sight unless a radical change was adopted. The change makes all the streets running north and south, avenues, numbering east and west from the River, Sydneyham and the harbor which divides the town. Thus Poulett and Water streets, the main business thoroughfare becomes East Second avenue.

Will Finish B. C. Line.

The Canadian Pacific Railway Co. is preparing to complete the Esquimaux and Nanaimo Railway to close the connection across Vancouver from Nanaimo on the eastern side to Alberni on the western shore. There are about 30 miles yet to finish. It is expected that everything will be ready for work to start early this month, and the contractors will be able to carry on operations all winter owing to the mild climate on the island, where frost and snow are almost unknown.

Mr. James Macdonell, the well-known Vancouver contractor who was in Montreal, recently stated that with the activity displayed on this line it would probably be completed for operation within a year. The road, Mr. Macdonell stated, will run through the best country on Vancouver Island, the route being very heavily timbered, so that from the very start there will be a big traffic in lumber. Much of the southern part of the island, he stated, is also well adapted for general farming, and, once the timber is cleared off, it is expected that there will be a large influx of settlers.

National Defence.

It is not to be expected that in Canada the sea would be as much in evidence as in England or in Australia. Our eyes have been fixed rather upon the land than on the sea; our energy and enterprise have been devoted to developing our great areas of land, just as the energy and enterprise of the United States people of Kingdom led them to explore the seas and to open up new avenues of trade by sea. Much misunderstanding and wrangling would be avoided if allowance were made for geography and history, and if movements for defence were carried on along and not against the natural lines of historical development.—Star, Toronto.

TO LIGHTEN TEDIOUS TASKS Victims of the Wreck of the Hestia

By Ruth Cameron. One of the best ways to get through a tedious task that I know is to set yourself stents. When I was in college I earned some of the money for the extras one summer by going to work in an office. The first task I had given me to do was the filing of some thousands of patents, a performance that was absolutely tedious and endless. At first I worked blindly along, just getting my work done as fast as I could and letting it go at that. And as the work itself was entirely uninteresting I was bored to death. Then somehow or other I took to setting myself stents, racing with myself. "I will get the O's done by five tonight," I would say, and that would be something to work for. Instead of going listlessly ahead I threw myself energetically into the work and if I got that done or even more than that I experienced great pride and pleasure. It helped a lot and I've done it with all my disagreeable and tedious tasks since then. Did you ever try it? Do some day. Say, "The dishes by half-past eight and the beds by nine and see what fun it is to beat yourself by ten minutes. It's really worth trying." "Lifebuoy Soap is delightfully refreshing for Bath or Toilet. For washing underclothing it is unequalled. Cleanses and purifies." B. O. ELECTIONS. The British Columbia legislature has been dissolved. Nominations November 11th, polling November 26th. Premier McBride is going to the country on an extended railway policy. Her Amendment.—"Don't you like that quotation from Shakespeare: 'The friends thou hast and their adoption tried, grapple them to thy soul with hoops of steel?' he asked soulfully. "I think hoops of gold would be better," said the summer girl, shyly.—Life.
